Victor Christofferson, who has been engaged in the electrical business in this city for some time, leaves for Atlanta, Ga., where he has accepted the position of superintendent of the electrical repair department in the Campbell machine shop in that city. Much of the electrical work of the exposition goes to the company, so Mr. Christofferson will be kept very busy.

THE PYTHIANS FIELD DAY.

SPECIAL TRAIN WILL CARRY PLAINFIELD KNIGHTS TO PHILLIPSBURG.

The Convention Will Be Held Next Monday—All the Prominent Members of the Society Will Be There—Arrangements.

The field day of the Knights of Pythias of New Jersey will be held this year at Phillipsburg on Monday, the twenty-third day of September, and promises to be one of the finest displays that the Pythians have ever had. Preparations have been made to care for an enormous crowd of Knights and their friends and this, coupled with the scenery in and around Phillipsburg and neighboring cities, which can be easily reached by electric cars, make it one of the best excursions of the season. A special train leaves Newark at 8:45 in the morning and will stop at Plainfield going and coming. The Knights and their friends are to be carried at the extremely low price of one dollar and twenty-five cents for the round trip, the train only stopping at Plainfield for the Knights and their friends, and tickets can only be had on the train. Five thousand members of the order will be in line, four battalions of uniformed Knights, sixty-five mounted officers and marshals, sixteen bands of music, and a division of Knights mounted on bicycles form a part of the superb display.

The Governor and Staff, members of Congress and the U. S. Senate from New Jersey, have been invited, as has also the State Legislature, county officials, Board of Trade, Board of Education, Mayor and Council of Phillipsburg, and the officers of the Grand Lodge of New Jersey, K. of P. The Knights will be welcomed by the Hon. John C. Perdoe, Mayor of Phillipsburg, and Grand Chancellor, Major Ralph Donath, of Jersey City, will respond in behalf of Grand Lodge of New Jersey, and Brigadier General Rhodes, on behalf of the militia branch. Competitive drills by the Uniform Rank will be conducted for handsome money prizes, and the Grand Chancellor offers a handsome K. of P. flag to the lodge making the best appearance passing the reviewing stand. The parade takes place at 2 p. m. The demonstration promises to be one of the best ever held by the order in New Jersey, and no citizen imbubed with local pride, nor member proud of his lodge, can fail without regret to be present at Phillipsburg on the twenty third inst.

AN ODD FELLOWS FUNERAL.

The funeral services over the remains of Louis B. Mulford were largely attended yesterday afternoon at his late home in the Manning flats. The services at the house were under the charge of Rev. Herbert Randolph, of Grace M. E. church, and Rev. Dr. Yerkes, of the First Baptist church, who spoke briefly of the admirable characteristics of the deceased, and drew consoling conclusions from his demise for the afflicted relatives.

The bearers of the casket were members of Queen City Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which Mr. Mulford was a member. Fifty-four members of this organization attended the funeral in a body, and at the grave the services were impressively conducted from the Odd Fellows ritual by Noble Grand A. G. Barber and Chaplain W. J. Conroy. The floral tributes were very beautiful, the Odd Fellows gift being a pillow with three links and the letters I.O.O.F. prettily arranged thereon.

A NEW CATHOLIC SOCIETY.

It Will Be on the Same Lines as the Y. M. C. L., But With No Age Limit.

A mass meeting was called yesterday afternoon in the Y. M. C. L. rooms to organize a Catholic union. M. J. Caslin called the meeting to order and was elected temporary chairman. J. J. Gallagher was elected secretary. Father Murphy made an address stating that the object of the meeting was to organize a social club to which all members of the parish might belong. He told of the need of such an organization, as the Y. M. C. L. is only for young men.

An association was then organized and about eighty of those present came forward and signed their names. The charter will remain open for four weeks longer, however, to allow all who wish to become charter members.

The real object of the meeting was to change the name of the Young Men's Catholic Lyceum and reorganize it so that it will allow any who wish, irrespective of age, to become members. The new organization is to take the place of the Y. M. C. L.

The meeting adjourned to the call of the chairman.

SCALDED BY STEAM.

The Engineer at Scott's Was in a Perilous Position.

David Fisk, of Johnston avenue, the engineer at the Scott Printing Machine Works, was badly scalded by steam about the arms last Saturday morning while endeavoring to repair a break in the machinery. It seems that a cup blew out and Fisk got down in narrow quarters to repair the break while the assistant cut off the steam. The break was thought to have been fixed and the signal given to turn on the steam before the engineer got out of the pit. The moment the steam was turned on the cup blew out again filling the air with scalding steam, with the result of badly injuring Fisk. The flesh peeled from his arms and he was taken to his home where a physician was called and administered to his injuries. Today his arm is badly swollen and he is unable to work.

—William Hauptman, of the Chrystie Street mission in New York, spoke at the Y. M. C. A. meeting yesterday afternoon.

Irving W. Larimore, physical director of Y. M. C. A., Des Moines, Iowa, says he can conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm to athletes, gymnasts, bicyclists, football players and the profession in general for bruises, sprains and dislocations; also for soreness and stiffness of the muscles. When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

A MURDER IN SOMERSET.

ANOTHER MYSTERIOUS NEW JERSEY TRAGEDY RECORDED YESTERDAY.

A Colored Girl Found Dead in the Bushes Along a Highway—Supposed to Have Been Murdered For Her Money.

About 8 o'clock yesterday morning Peter N. Dow found the body of a young mulatto woman lying in a clump of bushes twenty feet from the river road in Somerville. Dow at once informed County Physician Wagoner and a large crowd went to the scene of the tragedy. An examination showed that the woman was about twenty-two years of age. She was well dressed and wore earrings and a gold wedding ring. She had been choked to death, as finger marks were plainly discernible on her throat. Her clothing was torn and soiled, and she had been assaulted. Mrs. Catherine Johnson, a colored woman, who lives with her husband on the Elmendorf farm, identified the murdered woman as Annie Beekman, of Newark, who had been visiting her. The girl was a servant at the farm of W. W. Horner, of Neshanic, until two years ago when she went to Newark.

Early this week Annie came back to Somerville to visit the fair. On Thursday night she went to the home of Mrs. Johnson and remained there until yesterday morning, when she said she was going to Neshanic to see Calvit Corte, to collect $4⁴, which she said he had held in trust for her. She did so, and A. Jacob Johnson, the husband of Cathegine, went with her.

Johnson and the woman arrived at the Somerville depot at eight o'clock last night. From there they went to several beer saloons where, it is alleged, they imbibed freely. About nine o'clock they came back to the depot, and when Johnson saw the woman engage in conversation with two "fakirs" from the fair grounds he became disgusted and left her. He says the two men were smooth-shaven and one was short in statue and wore black clothes. Johnson says he did not see the woman again until he saw her dead this morning. An examination of the road near where the body was found shows that a terrible struggle took place, after the woman had been pursued for some distance by one or two men.

TO VOTE FOR VOORHEES.

North Plainfield Delegates Not Instructed, But Announce Their Intentions.

The first steps toward electing the Governor were taken in the borough Saturday evening when the Republicans met in the schoolhouse to choose delegates to the convention at Trenton, which will nominate the Republican candidate. B. A. Hegeman, Jr., a member of the county committee, called the meeting to order, W. W. Howland was elected chairman, and H. J. Martin, secretary.

Peter A. Emmons and Newton B. Smalley were unanimously chosen as delegates, with James K. Arnold and Thomas Doud as alternates.

A motion was then made that the sentiment of the meeting be that Foster L. Voorhees should be nominated, and considerable discussion ensued. The motion was finally laid on the table. Mr. Smalley stated that both he and Mr. Emmons expected to vote for Voorhees on the first ballot at least.

VOORHEES WAS HERE.

The Senator Talked Over the Situation in This City Saturday Fight.

Senator Foster M. Voorhees, of Elizabeth, was in town Saturday night and had a conference in the city clerk's office with a number of local Republicans regarding his chances for securing delegates to the State convention. The result of the primaries held Friday night were so favorable to his canvass that he is making an extra hustle now to make as good a showing in this city. The primaries in Plainfield will be held tomorrow evening, but Kean will doubtless capture a portion of the delegates.

Address By a Missionary.

The meeting of the Plainfield Branch of the Christian Alliance will be held Tuesday evening at 7:30 at 317 East Front street. I. L. Hess, superintendent of "Beradiah Home," New York, will address the meeting. Mr. Hess expects to start for the China mission field in a few months, and another opportunity may not be given his Plainfield friends to hear him before his departure. Mrs. Hess will accompany him to the foreign field.

—White of Plainfield has just received direct from the manufacturers 500 pairs of fine wool blankets, and to make a quick sale he will offer them at very low prices.

THE GREAT PEACH RUN.

CRESCENT WHEELMEN HAD A JOLLY TIME ALL ALONG THE TRIP.

The Roads Were Heavy, Causing Many Accidents and Breakdowns, But Nothing of a Serious Nature Happened.

That long anticipated event of the Crescent Wheelmen, the annual peach run to Clinton, came off yesterday and, as far as peaches went, was a grand and glorious success.

Ex-Captain Haynes was in command of the twenty-six riders that started and a glorious time they had. The weather was perfect, but the roads were not, as the dust was two inches deep and it was impossible to see the small stones which played havoc with the tires. The party stopped at the farm of John Haynes, son of the ex-captain, and ate peaches and drank milk until they could hardly ride. Then they went on to Clinton, about two miles further, and sat down to a magnificent dinner at Weller's Hotel, spring chickens, and peaches in every imaginable form, besides hosts of other good things. Then they returned, stopping at Haynes' farm and feasting again on peaches and milk.

When they arrived at Somerville they found the hotel and all the houses empty, everybody having gone to the coroner's inquest of the mulatto girl who was murdered there. The wheelmen took possession of the hotel and enjoyed themselves while they waited for someone to come. Finally they left for Plainfield.

The most lively part of the run was the accidents which were taking place every few minutes, and there was scarcely a rider who came through safely. Clifford Pearson punctured both of his tires and rode from North Branch to Somerville on the rims. T. J. Carey had a puncture and Mr. Rogers ran into a wagon and smashed his front forks. Will Weston enjoyed several punctures, while another rider had his cone all ground up into a number of small pieces. Charles Smith was another one to have several holes punctured into his tire. Harry Coward and C. C. Lister both had to dismount several times to loosen the bearings to their wheels which persisted in tightening up. There were a number of other smaller accidents which added to the fun.

When the party reached Clinton they found a camp meeting in session and several attended.

ANXIOUS FOR FENDERS.

Rev. Mr. Schenck Thinks the Street Railway Should Adopt Them Now.

In the preliminary remarks to his sermon yesterday morning Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, made allusions to the absense of fenders on the trolley cars in this city, and urged that it was important that such an apparatus should be provided without delay by the street railway company. He thought that the company should run no risk in this direction, waiting until the city ordinance recently passed should become a law. The Daily Press joins with Rev. Mr. Schenck that now is the proper time to adopt the fender. There is just as much risk now as there will be six months or a year hence.

Ran Away With an Ice Wagon.

A team of large grey horses, attached to an ice wagon belonging to the Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage Company, tried to run away Saturday afternoon. They started from in front of Griffin's hardware store on Front street and trotted down Somerset street. A man ran out of the side entrance to Smith's saloon and caught them. No damage was done.

Real Estate Movements.

James McGee, North Plainfield, to John F. McIntyre, lots, Westervelt avenue, $1.

P. Allen de Vebet, New York, to John F. Odiorne, Elizabeth, lots, Central avenue, $1.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L. Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

IT PUZZLED DEPEW

He Saw a Miraculous Cure at Lourdes.

The Doctor Relates His Experience at the World-Famed Shrine—Sights Affecting Beyond Words To Express—Sufferers in Every Stage of Living Death.

New York, Sept. 16.—Chauncey M. Depew, who returned yesterday on the Paris from an extensive visit in Europe, gave the press a lengthy account of his experiences abroad, the most interesting part, probably, being that of his observations at the shrine of Lourdes: Being near Lourdes while in the Pyreneee, said Mr. Depew, I paid a visit to the world-famous shrine. The vilage church stands on a high hill, and on one side is a precipice running down to the river obout 200 feet. At the bottom is a grotto, such as are common in the rocks in that region, about 100 feet deep, irregular and rough in shape. The legend of the place is, that in 1358 the Virgin appeared to a child in this grotto with promise of healing for the sick and a fountain burst forth, the waters of which have miraculous power. Faith in this has built broad highways along the river and over the hills for the pilgrims to march, constructed two splendid roads from the plain to the church enclosing within the arches on which they are carried a broad plaza, and under the terrace of the first landing a basilica for thousands of worshipers.

Every foot of the walls of the basilica and the church is covered with slabs on which the persons placing them have recorded their cures or some special blessing received. Over and around the grotto hang thousands of crutches and surgical appliances for supporting the body which have been left there by the healed. Alongside the grotto is a bathing place with four bath tubs filled with ice-cold water from the spring. Into this the patients are plunged, no matter what their disease or deformity. I was told over twelve hundred were dipped the day I was there. They are plunged into the water and instantly taken out under constant and loud supplications for their healing.

Night Scenes Wonderful.

At night the sights and scenes are wonderful. Thousands bearing torches and singing hymns are marching over the winding roads. Other thousands are on their knees in the space in front of the grotto praying, singing and imploring the Virgin for help. Hundreds upon hundreds of candles flicker and flare in the grotto and send a weird light upon the white-robed statue of the Virgin which stands just above. In the afternoon a vast procession forms at the grotto and marches along the river, turning into the plaza as it passes the point where the road rises from the plain upon the arches to the church. On one side of the plaza were placed in a row some hundreds of little wagons each holding an incurable sufferer. The sight of these helpless, and, except by miracle, hopeless men, women and children in every stage of distortion or living death, is affecting beyond words to express.

Sufferers Frenzied with Anxiety.

As the head of the procession reached the first wagon the priest elevated the Host before the patient. Another priest with a voice of great power cried out: "Oh Lord, help this sick one!" The hundreds of priests and five thousand pilgrims repeated the cry in unison. Again, louder and with tremendous passion and energy, he cried: "Oh Lord, heal this sick one," the crowd taking up the invocation as before. As the procession moved down the line of wagons, halting and repeating this supplication before each one, the excitement became painful in its intensity. The patients grew frenzied with anxiety and hope. The coolest and most indifferent man in the world could not have remained unmoved. I have seen and felt similar waves of emotion at camp meetings and revivals, but they had not the added force of this writhing mass of praying, beseeching, despairing and hoping human suffering.

A Patient from America.

As I was crossing the plaza after this scene from one of the dispensing wagons I heard by name called. It was occupied by a lady, and was drawn by her son, a student at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York. Both had recognized me, having heard me speak in New York. She said that the doctors at home had told her that science and skill could do nothing for her and she must make herself as comfortable as possible until the end, which was only a few months off. So she had come to Lourdes with faith and hope. I asked the grounds of her hopes and she said: "Why a miracle was performed this afternoon before your eyes. Did you not see it? That was the cause of the great excitement." This was her story.

A Remarkable Case.

A young girl who was staying at the same hotel as he did had been unable to walk or put her foot on the ground for six years. She had suffered frightful pain and screamed with agony when dipped in the icy water. She had been bathed six successive days and after the procession passed that afternoon had called out that she was cured. I said to the medical student: "What do you know about this?" He said that he had seen the knee bandaged at 12 o'clock that day. It was swollen badly and he had counted twenty-eight running sores from which the matter was exuding in a sickening way. I told him that I must see that girl. The pilgrims were mobbing the verification room, to which she had been taken, to see or touch her, and the attendants were doing their best to keep them out and get them away. My medical guide, with true New York audacity, called out: "The distinguished Dr. Chauncey M. Depew wants to see the patient." Instantly a way was cleared and in a few minutes I was inside. The girl was not there, having been carried home to escape the crowd.

Verified by an English Doctor.

There was an English doctor and I appealed to him. He said that he had dressed the leg at noon. It was swollen, suppurating and incurable; that he had cut the bandage off a half hour before and the leg was healed and the girl could walk, and he showed me the cut bandage. It was about two feet long and had been slit with a knife from top to bottom. I then insisted that I must see the girl. About 8 o'clock that evening my student acquaintance came to my hotel with a message that she and her friends would be glad to see me. My son and I started off instantly. I found a young lady about seventeen years old with a sweet, innocent, happy face.

A Puzzler for Dr. Depew.

She told her story substantially as I had heard it and that she had been unable to walk a step in six years. I asked her if she could walk now, and she went several times around the room, limping some, but with no apparent pain. I then ventured to request a sight of the knee. Her friends said certainly. The knee seemed quite normal. The flesh and muscles were firm and natural. Black spots marked the places where the running sores had been, but the sores were healed, and healthy skin and not scales over them. I have little faith in modern miracles, but this case puzzled me. Of course its weak point so far as I am concerned is that I did not see her before the alleged cure. The testimony, however, of the New York medical student, of his mother and of the English doctor was clear and positive. They might have been deceived, or tried to deceive me, though neither seems probable. Certainly I never had a more remarkable experience, and I leave the case with friends just where I found and left it.

DUNRAVEN'S STATEMENT.

It May Not Be Given Out Before Wednesday Next.

New York, Sept. 16.—The New York Yacht club headquarters at 67 Madison avenue are deserted to-day and no information can be had there as to when "Lord Dunraven's epistle to the Americans," as it has been dubbed, would be made public. None of the regatta committee are in town, and it was said by the clerks at the club house that the letter would not be made public until Wednesday. In the meantime it was announced that Lord Dunraven had cabled the letter abroad where it was printed. Yachtsmen generally seem to think that America has seen the last of his lordship as a cup challenger.

VIGILANT FOR SALE.

Mr. Gould Decides To Dispose of the Champion of '93.

New York, Sept. 16.—George Gould has decided that Vigilant, the champion sloop yacht of '93, is to large for him, and he will offer the boat for sale. He has set $25,000 as the amount he will let her go for, and says he believes that is very cheap as the racer is in good shape, faster than she was in '93 and has ever so many extra spars and sails. She would make a first class schooner yacht. Mr. Gould prefers a boat like the Niagara, owned by his brother Howard.

To Easy Matters at Home.

London, Sept. 16.—Lord Dunraven yesterday cabled to Mr. Grant, secretary of the Royal Yacht squadron, his correspondence with New York Yacht club on the events in connection with the contents for the Americ'a Cup, at the same time expressing a desire that the correspondence be published in England. "YANKEES ARE COMING"

Chattanooga Again Invaded by a Northern Army.

This Time, However, It Is an Army of Peace Gathering To Participate in the Dedication of Chicamauga National Military Park—Many Distinguished Visitors.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 16.—"The Yankees are coming!" was the alarming cry heard here thirty-two years ago, and a similar cry might be applicable at present for a great army of northerners are again pouring in, this time, however, it is an army of peace. The attraction is the dedication of the Chicamauga National Military park which will take place this week. It is estimated that more than 50,000 strangers will be present.

To Accommodate the Visitors.

To entertain this crowd numerous committees have been laboring for several weeks. The entertainment committee has induced nearly all the better class of residents to open their homes to visitors. Barracks that will accomodate several thousands have been erected by the government, vacant buildings have been fitted up with cots to house the crowds, and, if necessary, the schools and churches will be thrown open to give shelter to the visitors. More than a thousand troops of the regular army, fifteen companies of the statate militia, the Fourteenth Ohio regiment, and military companies from neighboring states will be in camp.

Array of Brilliant Orators.

The visitors who will take part in the dedicatory exercises include some of the most brilliant orators in the country. Among them are: Colonel Lewis R. Stedman of New York; General Charles H. Grosvenor of Ohio; Senator William B. Bate of Tennessee; General O. O. Howard, General E. C. Walthall of Mississippi; Colonel Fred Grant, Father Thomas Sherman, General John M. Palmer of Illinois; General Horace Porter of New York; Governor William McKinley of Ohio; Senator Charles F. Manderson of Nebraska; Lieutenant General Schofield, U. S. A.; General Granville M. Dodge of Iowa; General Daniel Butterfield of New York; General James H. Wilson of Delaware; General James Wheeler and others. Vice-President Stevenson will preside at the dedicatory exercises, while Secretary of War Lamont and Governor Morton of New York will be among the conspicuous figures.

Stars and Stripes Everywhere.

After a week's work the decorators have placed the city in gay attire, the principal streets being a mass of flags and bunting. One strikingly noticeable feature of all its decorations is the elaborate display of the Stars and Stripes. The flag is seen everywhere arching the thoroughfares, festooning all public places, decorating all buildings and hanging from every doorway. Nothing like it was ever seen before in the south. The park now presents a busy scene. Generals Fullerton and Boynton, of the national commission, have labored incessantly to get everything in readiness for the great event. A large platform and stand has been built on Snodgrass Hill, a point where the battle raged the fiercest in 1863. Here the dedicatory exercises will take place.

HOW MANY WOMEN DO YOU KNOW

Who Can Say They Are Thoroughly Well? How They Can Be Strong.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

I don't feel very well; I am so tired all the time; I don't know what is the matter with me.

You hear these words every day. As often as you meet your friends, just so often are the words repeated. More than likely you speak the same pregnant words yourself, and there is no doubt but that you do feel far from well most of the time.

There is a cause,

And—

There is a remedy for all that is covered by those words so constantly spoken by women.

Lydia E. Pinkham discovered the source of nearly all the suffering endured by the sex.

"Women's Complaints,"—these two words are full of more misery to women than any two words that can be found in the language of the world.

Sudden fainting, depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere or to do anything, backache, "bearing down," and kindred symptoms of serious disturbance seldom imagined by your family physician, and reluctantly mentioned by you.

The remedy is found; the same noble woman who discovered the cause of all your misery also worked out the remedy. All druggists have it.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the greatest blessing that ever came into the lives of suffering women.

HE IS A GREAT GENERAL

Waldersee Wins Laurels in Army Manœuvres

Berlin, Sept. 16.—The military experts who have just returned from participation in the annual manoeuvres at Stettin are unanimous in their praises of the masterly generalship of Von Waldersee, who reversed the whole programme and snatched unforseen advantages from the kaiser himself. As a tactician he is almost if not quite the equal of the late Field Marshal von Moltke, and in respect to dash and energy is second to no general that Germany has ever had. In regard to the fighting qualities of the German troops the notions formed by the different experts and correspondents differ somewhat, but in the main are favorable. One correspondent says the reserve men during the heat of the movements lay about on the ground making it look like a field of battle strewn with wounded. During the climbing of the slopes for an assault the men dropped from the effects of the heat as though they had been shot, and the army doctors rode around among them administering reviving cordials. The sanitary corps unfastened the heavy knapsacks from the fallen and assisted them to arise to their feet. The men were always full of grit and moved forward as soon as they were able to after they had recovered their strength.

Failure of the Cavalry.

The correspondent of the United Press, who was present throughout the manoeuvres, contends that the men stood the hardship imposed upon them with wonderful fortitude and without any show of fatigue worth mentioning. It is true that some of them broke down and lay by the roadside, but these men comprised only a few hundred out of 120,000. Of much more importance was the failure of the horse material under undue exertions. The cavalry became completely played out and the horses of the balloon detachment were so overworked that sometimes not even the severest whipping sufficed to get them up hill. The weight of the gas reservoir also proved too great a strain for the horses, and these show the necessity for a radical reform of the military material. Another reform affecting the lances introduced throughout the German cavalry of late years seems imperatively necessary. The lances do good work for a single man sent out to scout in opening doors and windows, giving the natives of an occupied country a wholesome scare and a degree of respect for invading forces during a clearing up expedition, but as soon as the men work in squadrons the lance becomes an incumbrance and even a source of danger to both man and horse.

Commissariat Mismanaged.

The infantry tried their new bayonets, which are of triangular shape instead of being shaped like Yataghans, and it is conceded that the latter style proves to be the most useful of any. The new portable tents were a great success. The men liked them as they could be erected without the slightest trouble. There was a great deal of discontent, however, with the management of the commissariat. Numbers of the men complained that they had nothing to eat for a whole day except a slice of bread. Officers and men alike were sometimes so fatigued that they preferred to go to sleep rather than remain awake and await the arrival of food. The chief commissary received a decoration at which he was highly elated, but the other officers of the commissariat were left to indulgence in volumes of bad language provoked by the clamors of the hungry men.

PROBABLY KILLED BY HAWKS.

Disastrous Flight of Homing Birds at Harrisburg.

Pittsburg, Sept. 16.—The Pittsburg Homing club had one of the most disastrous flights in its history from Harrisburg, Pa., to Pittsburg yeterday. There were seventy-nine birds liberated at Harrisburg and but seven of them returned. Race Secretary Davies ascribes the great loss to the assault of hawks and the fact that the birds mistook the country through which they were flying for Pittsburg so similar is it in hills and valleys.

NEW YO[illegible]

Interest in Enforcement of Sunday Law Now Centres on the Clubs.

New York, Sept. 16.—It was the general verdict that yesterday was as dry a Sunday as New York has seen yet. Great interest was centred in yesterday's proceedings as it was expected that the police would pay special attention to the clubs and make a test case as to the rights of these institutions to sell liquor on Sunday. In anticipation of the probable action of the police commissioners the great majority of the big clubs decided on Saturday that the visiting lists should be suspended and that no drink should be served to members without meals. Several of the clubs closed their bars entirely. The Girder club, of which Oliver Sumner Teal is president, served drinks. Mr. Teal is very anxious that a test case should be made of the rights of his club to sell liquor on Sundays to duly accredited members. He contends that the club is merely a storehouse for the members, and that they can come on Sundays and get their drinks. For this purpose a ticket which was punched as high as a dollar and which represented goods, liquids especially, which were purchased and stored away in the club, was issued to members. Two detectives, under orders from Captain Pickett, joined the Girder club a week ago to get evidence against it. Yesterday they visited the club and were served with a glass of whiskey each. Mr. Teal, who recognized the visitors, came and sat at the same table with the detectives and told them now was the time to make a test case. Mr. Teal suggested that one call for a drink for the other. "If you do that," said he, "I will make a complaint against you and you will be arrested. This will make an excellent test case, and I will have you bailed out immediately." The detective refused to do this. The detectives left the club to report the occurrence, and promised Mr. Teal that they would call around later in the day. Mr. Teal was much disappointed that the detectives had not made what he termed a proper test.

WORK OF INCENDIARIES.

Rockfeller's Magnificent Barn Near Tarrytown Burned.

Tarrytown, Sept. 16.—The magnificent barn and outbuildings owned by John D. Rockfeller, the oil magnate, which are situated on the Bedford road near Pocantico mills, were burned early yesterday morning together with their contents. The fire also spread to the large poultry houses and greenhouses in the rear of the barn. The poultry houses which contained some of the finest fowls in the country, were destroyed, while the hothouses, which sheltered some unusually fine horticultural specimens, were ruined. The total loss is in the neighborhood of $30,000, which is said to be covered by insurance. The foreman says that the fire was of incendiary origin. Several times while the barn was burning, he said, explosions could be heard. In the woods around the place cans of kerosene oil as well as dynamite have been found. Saturday morning Mr. Bolze laid off fifteen laborers who had been employed on the place, and it is thought that some of them took revenge for dismissal by setting the barn on fire. It is also stated that dynamite and powder was found around the Rockefeller mansion seemingly for the purpose of destroying that building.

JERSEY FOREST FIRES

Flames Playing Havoc in the Cranberry Bogs.

Thousands of Acres of Cedar Swamp Near Watterford Burning —Narrow Escape of Teams with Fire Fighters—One Town in Imminent Perl.

Waterford, N. J., Sept. 16.—A terrific fire is destroying thousands of acres of cedar swamps near here. This is the fire that has been burning in the Jackson meadows for the past two weeks, and which has destroyed at least $60,000 worth of property. Last night a 40-mile-an-hour wind drove the fire into the big cedar swamps and toward the Burnt hill cranberry bog, a mile from here. Residents, with a big gang of Italians, drove out in wagons and are still fighting the flames. By back-firing from the Acto branch of the Jersey Central railroad they saved the Collings cranberry bogs, but the fire is now stretched on in the big swamps from Jackson to Atison, a distauce of seven miles.

Narrow Escape of Teams.

Last evening teams with which the fire fighters drove to the scene came near being burned, and it was only by galloping through the suffocating smoke that they were saved. Cinders from the fire fell in Cedar Brook, seven miles away. The house and outbuildings on Isaac Hertford's place were destroyed, and one Italian from this place has been missing since 5 o'clock. E. Z. Collings, an extensive cranberry grower, is here with a big gang trying to save his bogs. Food is being conveyed in wagons to the exhausted men.

Some valuable cranberry bogs were burned. Another fire started at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon four miles above here and is now sweeping towards McKee City, which seems to be in imminent danger.

ROUGH VOYAGE OF THE PARIS.

Several Passengers Thrown Down and Injured.

New York, Sept. 16.—The American line steamship Paris, which arrived yesterday, experienced some very rough weather last Monday morning. A heavy southwest gale struck her about 6 o'clock. It continued in force for several hours. Big seas boarded the steamer on the promenade deck, breaking on the deck and throwing spray as high as the top of the funnels. The force of the wind was such as to injure several of the people aboard. One of these injured was John P. Hopkins, ex-mayor of Chicago. He was thrown down in the cabin and received some bruises on the leg. He was able to leave the steamer to-day. Another of the injured was the Rev. Rowland Hale, of England, an Episcopal clergyman, on his way to Boston. He was knocked down on the deck by the wind at 7 o'clock and sustained a fracture of the right leg. He was taken to St. Luke's hospital. One of the petty officers who hastened to render him assistance was also knocked down and rolled along by the gale, receiving several contusions.

"In Union there is division," remarks the Newark Advertiser, referring to the Republican primaries.

A Kansas woman is suing for a divorce on the ground that her husband hypnotized her into marrying him.

"Tramps Must Work," is the head the Camden Review prints over an item. When a tramp works he ceases to become a tramp.

The repulse to the Kean forces in Union county would be the more discouraging to the hopes of that candidate were it not universally known that Union county politicians, of both parties, have often opposed the ambitions of Union county men. In both his Congressional and Guberniatorial aspirations the late Governor Green found his most stubborn opponents among the Union county Democrats. Mr. Kean seems to find the same condition accented by a factional disturbance, which is much more likely to be effective in a nominating convention than in an election.—True American.

It took a New Jersey clergyman to quote the Bible as a fashion authority. He preached a sermon against bloomers, telling his hearers that such attire is forbidden in Deteronomy xxii., 5: "The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man." But as men do not wear bloomers and never did, the text shot wide of its intended mark and the preacher's effort to pervert the Scriptures ignominiously failed. Meanwhile women will continue to dress as they please and to look well, as they have done through all the ages.—Rochester Democrat.

The sweat shop editor of The News is an eminent success at printing what is not the truth. He states that he received the reports of the yacht race last Saturday by special wire. The Daily Press reiterates the statement that he faked his yacht race story from the posted bulletins of The Daily Press and from the early editions of the New York papers. He did not receive one word of yacht race news "by special wire from the greatest news distributing agency in New York."

What a humiliating spectacle the sweat shop editor of The News made of himself in his issue of Saturday, in the endeavor to make a plausible explanation of why he did not publish the sewage bed ordinance within the time limit, thereby necessitating a special meeting of the Common Council to rectify the mistake. On the day that the ordinance should have been published he declares that "two extra compositors were employed, all that were available in the city." Yes, quite true, all that were available—for his scab shop. The fact of the matter is that he cannot get members of the International Typographical Union to work for the wages and under the unfair rules which he maintains, and it was for this reason alone that compositors were not available for his work on the date in question. The need for his employing at least one of these alleged extra compositors displays better than anything else the sweat shop methods in vogue in The News office. A short time ago one of the compositors, who received the munificent sum of $2.50 per week for sixty hours exacting labor, left the office at half past five in the afternoon to go home on account of a painful and serious accident which a relative had suffered. The Saturday night following, this employe received ten cents less than the weekly stipend for the half hour lost. The result was that the employe resigned the position, thus necessitating the employment of one of these extra hands. The principle of docking a $2.50 week compositor at a $12 rate is one peculiar to The News editor.

SOME BASEBALL GOSSIP.

Pointers About the Game Interesting to the Cranks of This City.

Keeler made four hits for Baltimore in Saturday's game with the Brooklyn's, two put outs, three stolen bases, and no errors. Who is there can beat him?

The Southern League wound up its season on September 4th, Atlanta winning the pennant, of which club Leo Smith, formerly of this city, was a member. The windup was very exciting between the Atlanta's and Nashville's as the following will show:

	Won.	Lost.	Per Cent.
Atlanta	70	37	654
Nashville	69	38	649

Jack Sharrott, who all Plainfield cranks know, is hitting the ball hard for the Bangors in the New England League. He gets in two or three hits every game.

Catcher Warner of the Louisvilles, who formerly caught for the Westfield's "in the good old times," is entirely too good for a tail-end club. He has been playing good ball for the Louisville's and Manager Selee, of the Boston's, now sees he made a mistake in releasing him to them.

Pitcher Dolan, of the Boston's, and James Brown, of this city, are very close friends. They used to work together in Pennsylvania a few years ago.

A county base ball league between Elizabeth, Cranford, Westfield and Plainfield next year ought to prove successful. It would be a good thing to see some of the exciting times of a few years come back again, as Plainfield is dead without a ball team. A good location for a ball field is in the western part of the city near the terminus of the street railway which will be accessible to everybody, and The Press has no doubt if a good ball team could be got together and properly managed it would be a success. If towns like Somerville, Raritan, Flemington and others can have a ball team, why can't Plainfield have one? Now ye cranks get together and demand a ball team next year.

CYCLING COMMENT.

—Whatever doubts may have been entertained upon the lasting popularity of "Trilby" as a drama have long since been dissipated by the substantial, convincing success of Paul M. Potter's play and A. M. Palmer's company. Business continues uniformly great at the Garden Theatre, and the 200th performance of "Trilby" is already looked forward to in the early future. Seldom or never had a more satisfactory performance been seen in New York than that of "Trilby." The actors were all selected with particular reference to their personal as well as artistic fitness for their roles and under competent stage management the performance has rounded out into a complete harmonious whole. A new Svengali, in the person of Charles Kent, is announced for next week.

IN MEMORIAM.

[CONTRIBUTED.]

When all that was mortal of Mrs. Thomas MacDonald was laid to rest yesterday afternoon in the cemetery of North Plainfield, it might truly have been said that one of the representative women of our city had passed away. For almost forty years she had lived among us, leading a blameless life as wife, mother, friend and neighbor. "To know her was to love her," quiet, gentle, unobtrusive, but yet endowed with great powers of mind and good old-fashioned common sense. She was a sincere and earnest Christian, having been for many years a communicant in the Episcopal church.

Mrs. MacDonald was until the day of her death an ardent patriot. She had endured and suffered much for her country and flag. When the call to arms was sounded through our land her husband responded, and in May, 1861, left this city with Co. I, 3d N. J. Vols., in which went so many of our brave boys. For three years he served his country, and was permitted to return. In July, 1862, her son, her oldest born, a mere stripling, enlisted in Co. D, 11th N. J. Vols., "McAllister's Boys," but all unused to hardship the young feet soon grew weary, and after four months of service he was laid to rest in a soldier's grave at Alexandria, Va. The mother's heart never recovered from the blow, and after thirty years of waiting they have been united, never more to part. Mrs. MacDonald was a charter member of Garfield League of the Loyal Ladies League of this city, and had been its chaplain from 1884 until her death.

About two months ago Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald quietly celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. Had her health permitted the day would have been observed by her many relatives and friends in a manner befitting the occasion.

May the memory of such a life ever be tenderly cherished by her children and grandchildren.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE HIGH SCHOOL OPENS.

Many Changes Made, But All for Better Teaching.

To those whose entered the High school building this morning ready to return again to their school duties, a great surprise awaited them. The members of the senior, junior, and third classes were marched up to the third floor where Assembly hall, now filled with rows of single desks and chairs, awaited them. The fourth class was sent to the old third and junior class rooms on the second floor. Assembly hall was entirely changed by the familiar faces of Superintendent Maxson, Principal Travell, Miss Niles and Prof. Allen, who were there ready to welcome back their old pupils. The work of arranging the seating of the pupils was then commenced, after which came morning exercises. A few of the graduates of previous years gathered in the other room and wished they were back again.

After a few words of welcome by Superintendent Maxson and Mr. Travell, the assignment of classes was started. Tomorrow, work will begin in earnest and the regular schedule of classes will be followed out.

The attendance was very good for the first day, the Fourth class, in particular, being very large.

Hotel Netherwood Plans.

Leonard Spangenberg called at The Press office this morning and stated that yesterday he had a talk with those who have purchased the Hotel Netherwood property, and that they state the place will not be open to incurables, but will be conducted more on the plan of a hotel for invalid people who need rest and medical attendance. It is said that many of the residents in Netherwood were much concerned over the supposition that the hotel was to be a sanitarium where deaths would occur frequently among the incurable patients, but Mr. Spanggenberg investigated and finds that there is no occasion for alarm in that direction.

Can't Sail With Her.

Some of Valkyrie's supporters in the West End feel very glum over the outcome of the yacht races. One was heard singing the following Saturday night:

I don't want to sail on your side.
I don't like you any more;
You'll be sorry when you see me
Making for my native shore.

You shan't crowd me with your steamers.
You shan't have my victoree.

"ONLY SKIN DEEP", yet freckles, sunburn and tan don't add to one's beauty! What then, aside from the dangerous and poisonous "skin cures" so freely advertised, can we use to clear and bleach a bad complexion? Well, why not try your grandmother's cure—lemon juice? It will surely do all that can be safely done to clear the skin. And try it in the pleasant form of REYNOLD'S LEMON JUICE AND GLYCERINE. The results will please you. 16 to 1.

These figures have played an important part in a question of considerable import to the nation. Whatever may have been your opinion concerning this question, there is no doubt that its real significance lies in the fact that at the great Inter-State Fair, at Trenton, you get for one dollar sixteen times its value. But then it doesn't cost you a dollar—only fifty cents. Still you get the sixteen dollars worth of value. You get it in health, in pleasure, in recreation, in new ideas and in a better and more vigorous equipment for the year's work and worry. Don't forget the dates: September 30th to October 4th.

Camping In Washington Park.

Chief VanHorn went on his usual rounds yesterday on the lookout for any Sabbath-breaking and discovered six loungers along the brook near Giraud avenue. Three were playing cards but when the Marshal came up he could discover no signs that they had been playing for money. The other three were cooking something on a fire. The Marshal ordered the men away as trespassers and warned them not to do it again.

THIS DINNER COST $20,000.

John Wanamaker's Son, Rodman, Gave It in Paris.

The people of Paris will talk for many a day about the wonderful dinner party given at the Pavilion d'Armenonville, a famous restaurant in the Bois de Boulogne, by Rodman Wanamaker, the son of the merchant and ex-politician of Philadelphia. Twenty-two guests partook of this feast.

Twenty-two of the finest equipages which Paris stables could produce called at the same moment at the residences of the guests, and then brought them to the banquet hall. The list of guests included Count Bryas, Count de Chazelles, Count de Rochefoucauld, Baron van Zuylen, the son-in-law of Baron Rothschild, and the artist, Roland Knodler, of New York. The decorations of the dining-room were marvelously beautiful. Luminous fountains, planted upon great blocks of ice, kept the air cool.

The dinner itself showed a splendid disregard of cost. It was not one dinner, but twenty-two independent dinners, separately served, one to each guest. There was none of the meanness of the Europeans, who are not ashamed, even when wealthy, to make a roast of fish do duty for the whole party.

Each guest had before him a whole leg of mutton, a whole salmon, truffled fowl, a basket of peaches, and a double magnum of champagne, beside bottles of wine of sacred vintage and fabulous cost. After the dessert had been served a waiter brought around a black silk bag, into which each guest thrust his hand and drew out a souvenir. The souvenirs were pearl and emerald pins, ruby links, gold cigarette cases, inlaid with diamonds, and other trifles of substantial value. It is asserted that the cost of the entire affair was close to $20,000.

Young Wanamaker succeeded to his own satisfaction in demonstrating that American hospitality, when measured by the cash standard, quite distances effete European customs. Some comments on the affair, in which Frenchmen and foreigners are indulging, do not have a pleasant sound in the ears of other Americans in Paris, and some protests are made that young Wanamaker is not a typical American host.

Huxley's Kindness.

F. G. M. Powell in the London Spectator, says:

Some time ago I received a letter from Prof. Huxley asking me for an account of a parishoner of mine, a casual laborer in a large dockyard. I found out the man, and gathered that he was socially of the laboring class—politically, a socialist and theologically a freethinker; but that all his spare time was devoted to original research, aided by a six penny magnifying glass.

So I reported accordingly, and in a few days received a letter thanking me for my exhaustive report from Professor Huxley, he saying that this man had sent him a paper containing a most vivid and scientifically accurate description of the multiplication by fission of a lowly organism observed by him in an infusion of his own preparation.

The Professor's object in writing was to ask me how best such a man could be helped, I being at his special request the intermediary.

So I suggested in the meanwhile a microscope and a few scientific books. In the course of a few days I received a splendid achrometic compound microscope and some books, which I duly handed over to my friend, telling him it was from an unknown hand.

"Ah," he said, "I know who that must be; it can be none other than the greatest of living scientists; it is just like him to help a tyro."

I need hardly to say how well and truly my friend has profited by the professor's generosity; still more, by the thought of his interest and sympathy. It was Prof. Huxley's wish, I know, to try to find him a post in a marine laboratory or some similar congenial occupation. But this plan, I fear, will now never be carried out.

Still, the fact remains, of true genius, though obscure, having been discovered and fostered by him whose death has caused so great a blank in the roll of great English savants.

Would Accommodate the Bees.

She was a small girl, but quite large enough to reason and draw logical conclusions. In her father's back yard a swarm of bees was kept, and they seemed especially hostile to the small girl. One day they stung her over the eye, and there was a swollen little face for a whole week. The next week they stung her on the arm, and finally her cup of sorrow seemed filled when she received another sting on her leg. As the mother patiently applied the usual remedies to the last wound the little one sighed and said:

"It does seem to me, mamma, as if there was no good place on a little girl for a bee to sting."—Syracuse Post.

Husband and Friend.

"Another woman," said Mr. Alden, "was boasting to me of her husband—how different he was from other husbands; how he frequently failed to treat her roughly and cruelly. 'Why,' said she, 'he's more like a friend to me than a husband.'"

His Indorsement.

Paying Teller—This check is made out payable to Patrick Mehanny, and you have indorsed it Michael O'Hara. Is that your name?

Patrick—Divil a bit; but you see Mike owes me jest the same amount and I thought this was a good chance to git it out av him, don't ye see?

A hunter of Grant's Pass, Or., found the other day the left half of the antlers of a six year old elk embedded in the heart of a live oak stump. The rings indicating the growth of the tree showed that the horns had been in the tree more than seventy years.

BALLOONS IN WARFARE.

It Behooves Uncle Sam to Hump Himself, as Have Other Nations.

Uncle Sam will soon be forced to consider seriously the establishment of a balloon corps as an adjunct of the army. This country is sadly behind in the development of aeronautics, while England, Germany, and especially France have been giving much attention to the subject, though their experiments have been veiled as far as possible. Within a year the French have produced a balloon that can be steered and maneuvered in the teeth of a wind blowing twenty miles an hour.

In truth, the most important problem in aerostation has been solved, and the dirigible balloon is now an accomplished fact. Cigar shaped airships have recently been run by propellers in France on calm days at fourteen miles an hour, and there is no doubt that double that speed can be attained.

The Germans are said to have produced a balloon that can be steered and which carries great weights; but little is known about it. The supposition that atmospheric air is too tenuous a medium for propelling fans to act upon is exploded, while it is certain that a rudder will operate to direct the aerial machine if the latter can be driven fast enough to give it steerage way.

The notion that an airship sustained by gas is not to be relied on is another fallacy. Experts in Europe now understand how to make balloons tight, so that leakage is reduced to almost nothing.

When one has a gas bag of gold beater's skin that will stay afloat thirty days he has something with which to begin business.

If half a dozen aerial batteries of four balloons each were stationed along the Atlantic cost no hostile fleet could come near our seaboard cities. The vessels could be sunk by dropping nitro-glycerine cartridges upon them.

Dr. Myers, the aeronautic engineer, speaks of experiments in killing ducks in water by dropping shot from an elevation of 1,500 feet. Falling so far, the velocity of the leaden pellet was as great as if fired from a gun.

Air current at a high elevation always move from west to east. Having wiped out the ship, it would be necessary for the flying battery to return in the face of the wind, but this could be accomplished very easily by using the propellers.

Uncle Sam has been thinking of putting more than $20,000,000 into coast and harbor defences for the Atlantic shore line. To keep these in order would require an expenditure of millions of dollars annually, without considering that the entire system would have to be remodeled every few years. Aerial batteries as here described would cost comparatively little at the beginning and could probably be maintained for $1,000 each per annum. Of course, a long course of experiments would be required. Meanwhile, if England should come down upon our cities with a flock of balloons from Montreal we would be obliged to sue for peace on any terms.

Against balloons no armed force on land or water could have any means of defense or retaliation. The warriors in an air ship would be absolutely safe at an elevation of a little more than a mile. Owing to the force of gravity, no shot that can be fired from any gun will do damage beyond 6,000 feet above the surface of the earth.

If a balloon were within, say, 1,500 feet of the ground, and passing away, the line of sight would change so slowly that sharpshooters could easily pepper it with accuracy; but even so the balloon would not suffer importantly. Though pierced by a score, or even 100 bullet holes, its bouyancy would not seriously be affected.

A rifle bullet puncturing a great gas bag would make a small hole only, which would be partly closed again by the broken edges of the fabric. Some gas would escape, but not enough to be of any consequence. But there would be no reason for passing over a hostile fleet or army at so low an elevation, as a bomb could be dropped as accurately from a point high enough to be out of reach. Beside, the instant that a bomb would be thrown the balloon would rise rapidly.

At night or in a fog it would be entirely safe from observation. Or it would be easy enough for the airship to come down into the lower part of the cloud, whence the crew could see the enemy below while invisible.

These are the most important conclusions obtained from experiments recently made by foreign powers. During the siege of Paris balloons were sent up in large numbers from the city, passing over the besieging armies. The aeronauts took homing pigeons which carried back news. These balloons were constantly fired at, and Krupp, the gunmaker, at the request of Von Moltke, designed a balloon musket. This sort of rifle practice proved wholly ineffective, and only those balloons were captured which were low down through expended gas.

But She Meant Nothing.

"Do you know," he was saying, "that I never can keep my head under water when I go swimming. I've tried and tried."

"Perhaps you don't try long enough," she said in an absent-minded way, and he is still wondering what she meant.—Detroit Free Press.

TRAGEDY IN MID-AIR

"Is Jack Tunnicliffe going with you to-morrow, Tom?" said my wife to me. "I wish you would take some one else."

"Why, Norah?" I asked.

"He's been stranger than ever in his manner since his wife died, I hear. In fact, I've been told by more than one person that he's quite insane at times. It's not to be wondered at if he is, poor fellow. I don't know a sadder case. He'd only been married a week. Such a horrible death, too! It's enough to turn a man's brain, and I must confess, Tom, I wish Jack was not going with you."

"Nonsense, Norah! People always exaggerate and make the worst of things, as you know. If a man's at all original or eccentric, it's at once assumed that he's non compos. Of course Jack's low-spirited and absent-minded, and perhaps a bit peculiar at times. How can he help brooding over his terrible loss? He wants some exciting occupation to take off his thoughts from his trouble. He's as fond of ballooning as I am, and a trip will do him all the good in the world."

The above conversation between my wife and myself took place on the evening before the day which I had fixed for a balloon ascent. Ballooning was my hobby. I had conceived a liking for it on my very first ascent. This liking had become a "craze," for the novel experience and strange sensation of sailing over houses and trees and of soaring into the clouds had a peculiar fascination for me.

Recently I had tried to combine utility with pleasure, and had made some ascents solely for scientific purposes. I had found a kindred spirit in young Tunnicliffe, and we had many delightful and successful trips together. Owing to the untimely death of my friend's wife, our aerial expeditions had been suspended for awhile. As several weeks had elapsed since that sad event, I felt anxious to resume these expeditions, and as Tunnicliffe had expressed his willingness to accompany me, a day had been fixed for our next trip. It was when I was talking to my wife about this self-same trip that she expressed her regret that Jack Tunnicliffe was going with me.

I had not much difficulty, however, in overcoming her objections and allaying her fears. She was not averse to my hobby, and had even accompanied me in one or two of my journeys in the air. Moreover, she sympathized with me in my desire "to make some useful discovery," and was therefore unwilling to damp my ardor or hinder the progress of my observations. She had felt the exhilarating effect of a balloon ascent, and my reference to the benefit young Tunnicliffe would probably derive from the projected trip appealed to her experience as well as to her tender heart.

Accordingly next day at the appointed time, everything being in readiness, we started on our aerostatic journey. Tunnicliffe, contrary to his usual demeanor, seemed a little excited, but this caused me no apprehension. His interest had probably been awakened, and it was only natural that he should be animated on such an occasion. The balloon was set at liberty as soon as we had taken our seats, and the machine rose beautifully. There was a gentle breeze, which bore us slightly southward. We rose slowly at first, and so had plenty of time to gaze on that vast and extending panorama below us.

Presently we entered a huge bank or mountain of cloud of the kind called cumulus, and were surrounded by a chilling mist which induced us to put on the wraps we had brought.

When we emerged from the cloud a scene of fairy-like beauty burst upon us. We were in a kind of basin surrounded by mountains of cloud of the most fantastic shapes, of enormous size and of dazzling brightness.

Now and then, also, as we rose, we caught sight of wondrous ravines of curious shape and great depth. These mountains of clouds, with their silvery and golden sides, their dark sides, their varied tints and summits of dazzling whiteness, presented to our wondering gaze a scene of surprising beauty and grandeur.

This sublime spectacle evoked my highest admiration, while the silence and vastness of space inspired me with awe. I drank in these exquisite and varied delights with such avidity and with such absorbing interest that I had scarcely looked at or spoken to my companion since we had started. But an exclamation from him now diverted my attention, and, glancing at him, I was surprised to see that he had risen and was much excited.

"What is it, Jack?" I asked.

"Isn't it glorious?" he replied. "I wonder if heaven is much more beautiful? How delightful it would be if we could reach it! I should see my Ada again, then."

"My dear fellow," I interposed hastily, somewhat alarmed—not so much by his words as by his excited manner and look; "you think too much of these things." "You have been brooding over your loss more than is good for you. Will you——"

"At any rate," cried he, vehemently, "it's worth trying; so here goes," and seizing one of the sandbags he threw it over. The lightened balloon at once began to rise more quickly.

"What are you doing, Jack?" I shouted. "For heaven's sake, keep calm. We are a good height already. We shan't be able to breathe if we go much higher. It's getting uncomfortable as it is."

"Shan't we? We shall see about that. I'm going to try, anyhow. Besides, I don't care if I can't breathe. I want to see my Ada. That's all I care about."

I began to fear the worst? Was he going mad? Were the reports my wife had heard literally true, and not exaggerated after all? What a fool I had been not to be more cautious! Whether he was mad or not, he was in a dangerous mood, and my position was far from pleasant. To oppose him would probably aggravate him and make matters worse. To humor him was probably the wisest course.

"Look here, Jack!" I cried. "You say you want to see Ada. I can tell you of a better and surer way of going to her than this. If you will listen to me—here I involuntarily moved my hand toward the valve-cord—if you will listen to me I——"

"None of your blarney, man! I'm not to be wheedled so. I'm too old a boy for that. Leave the cord alone, can't you? I'm not going down again to-day. I'm going to see what's up there, and don't you try to stop me," and he glared fiercely at me.

The horrible nature of my situation was now only too apparent—there could no longer be any doubt of Tunnicliffe's condition. I was in a balloon with a mad man, and about four miles from the earth. I felt the cold sweat upon my brow, and my brain began to reel. But with a tremendous effort I pulled myself together, for my only chance of safety was in retaining my self possession. To attempt to overpower him was out of the question—the strength of a madman is so well known. My only hope of escape was to outwit him. But how! Forced into unnatural activity, as my brain was by my desperate situation, and by the necessity of prompt action, I could think of no device or ruse that would do any good; I was completely at the mercy of the madman.

The hopelessness of my case paralyzed all my energies. I felt unable to move or speak, and even the power to think was almost gone. In my despair I glanced at the valve cord. Owing to the rotatory motion of the balloon it had unfortunately become entangled. To free it, I should be obliged to leave the car and climb into the ring. But to attempt such a thing (even if I was physically capable of it) would be certain to lead to a struggle that would as certainly send one or both of us out of the car.

We were now at such a height that asphixia was imminent. I breathed with difficulty, and a horrible sensation like that of seasickness came over me. The cold was so intense that I shivered, notwithstanding my wraps. The mental strain was terrible. I was almost frantic. Knowing, however, that in a short time I should be unconscious, and then all would be over with me, I nerved myself for one last effort.

As I rose from my seat my eyes fell on the grapnel. Fortunately it was on my side of the car. A sudden idea struck me, here was a weapon to hand. It was an awful thought—it would be a terrible deed. But there was now no alternative, no time for delay. My senses were going. I stretched out my hand, but the madman who never took his eyes off me, had detected my purpose. With a sudden movement he darted forward and seized the grapnel, but in his eagerness to forestall me he had precipitated himself too far over the side of the car and almost lost his balance. He made a desperate effort to recover himself, but, seized with a sudden and irresistible impulse, I pushed him over, and with a horrible yell, that rings in my ears whenever I recall the occurrence, he disappeared from my sight.

Almost mad myself—I am not sure that I was not quite so just then—I climbed into the ring to reach the valve line. But my hands were so stiff and numb with the cold that I could not grasp the rope. By a kind of inspiration which seemed providential I seized the cord with my teeth, and after three or four tugs the valve opened with a loud clang.

Thank heavens! I was saved. My hands being useless, I was obliged to throw up my arms and drop into the car, where I lay motionless and unconscious for awhile.

My swoon could not have lasted more than a few seconds, for when I recovered the barometer showed that I was still in a high latitude, although the balloon was descending rapidly. I rubbed and beat my hands until the circulation was restored. Then I set about taking the necessary precaution against a too rapid descent. But I acted more like an automaton than a conscious agent, for I seemed in a kind of stupor trance all the time.

How and where I reached the solid earth I cannot say. I have only a dim, hazy recollection of being surrounded by a crowd of people. Some were bending over me and seemed to be questioning me, but I couldn't make out what they said.

I felt an awful pain in my head, and remember nothing more until I found myself in bed in a dark room and my wife bending over me. This was several days later, and I learned then that I had been brought home in a delirious state and had had brain fever.

When I recovered my friends congratulated me, and tried to persuade me that as my homicidal act was done in self-defense it was justifiable. I hope it was, but I can never recall it without misgiving and horror, and I have never made a balloon ascent since.—Tid-Bits.

Taken Suddenly Ill.

The wife and relatives of Jacob R. Van Winkle were terribly shocked yesterday morning by finding Mr. Van Winkle lying unconscious and apparently dead on the floor at his home on Elm place. Dr. Keeney was summoned, but before her arrival he showed evidences of life. The Doctor prescribed for him and he is again about. The cause was gas of the stomach, which interfered with the heart action.

NEXT YEAR'S BICYCLES.

They Will Probably Be Heavier, With Larger Tires.

Buffalo bicycle manufacturers, as well as the large makers of wheels both in the East and West, are beginning to prepare their models for 1896. It is announced that the coming wheel will differ materially from the one of this or several preceding years.

It will be heavier by a few pounds and vastly stronger. It will have wheels of greater diameter and the coming tire is said to be about one-half larger than the tire now in use. This is generally accepted among makers as being somewhat of a description of the new model.

While the wheels will be a little heavier it does not mean that the clumsy frame of a few years ago will again be in use. It means simply that manufacturers have come to the conclusion that it is bad policy to make a light wheel at the expense of strength.

Unless some lighter metal than steel may be employed, having like tensile strength, wheels cannot be made lighter than they now are without being made dangerously weak, it is said. Therefore added weight will be placed where the greater strength is needed for safety, and the makers will devote their skill to lessen friction and increase speed. With all the added weight, it is said that the coming wheel will carry a rider much farther upon a like expenditure of physical energy than the wheel of to-day, and with added safety.

However, the style of the wheel will make no change in the price asked. A prominent Buffalo manufacturer recently said that there would be no fall in prices next spring in strictly high grade wheels, notwithstanding all that has been said or written to the contrary. He said that during the present year 140 new bicycle factories had been started in the United States, and, as a result, wheels can be had at any price one cares to pay, but that the high grade wheels will go on selling at high grade prices. He had no doubt of the truth of the statement that it was intended by a large Western syndicate to put wheels upon the market next year at $30 each, but he did not believe that such wheels would injure the manufacturers of high grade machines.

In fact, he believed that it would be for the benefit of high grade wheel makers. By having a $30 wheel in the market a great many people will own wheels who would not learn to ride for quite a number of years yet if they were compelled to pay standard prices. Once they have a wheel they will not be content with the cheap machine.

It is said that the increase in the size of the tire will be mainly in the thickness of the rubber tubing. An attempt will made to increase the thickness of the tubing, so that punctures will be less liable. Six ply rubber will not tear as readily as three or four ply.—Buffalo Express.

Napoleon and the Barber.

Napoleon's smooth face was a sure evidence of his dislike for a beard. In some anecdotes of the Russian campaign there is a story told of the great emperor and a poor but witty barber, who had occasion to shave him.

Napoleon had made a rather lengthy detour from the line of march with a detachment of officers. Arriving at a small village they refreshed themselves with a good meal and baths. Napoleon wishing to be shaved, the village barber was called in.

While the poor fellow stropped his razor and passed it industriously over the great emperor's chin, he remained silent and seemingly melancholy, although performing his work with amazing rapidity and smoothness. When he had finished, Napoleon complimented him, remarking:

"But, man, why do you wear such a melancholy face? You should be happy to have the privilege of shaving an emperor."

"I am doubly happy, Your Majesty."

"Then what is it that troubles you?"

"Alas! Your Majesty, when I think of the kings upon kings and emperors that have died without having known what it was to be shaved by me, I am sad and melancholy."—Harper's Round Table.

MARK TWAIN ON SECOND SIGHT.

The Humorist Tells of a Curious Experience That Once Befel Him.

Several years ago I made a campaign on the platform with Mr. George W. Cable. In Montreal we were honored with a reception. It began in the afternoon about 2 o'clock in a long drawing room in the Windsor Hotel. Mr. Cable and I stood at one end of this room and the ladies and gentlemen entered it at the other end, crossed it at that end, then came up the long left hand side, shook hands with us, said a word or two, and passed on, in the usual way.

My sight is of the telescopic sort, and I presently recognized a familiar face among the throng of strangers drifting in at the distant door, and I said to myself with surprise and high gratification:

"That is Mrs. R.; I had forgotten that she was a Canadian."

She had been a great friend of mine in Carson City, Nev., in the early days. I had not seen or heard of her for 20 years; I had not been thinking about her; there was nothing to suggest her to me, nothing to bring her to my mind; in fact, to me she had long ago ceased to exist and had disappeared from my consciousness. But I knew her instantly; and I saw her so clearly that I was able to note some of the particulars of her dress, and did note them, and they remained in my mind.

I was patient for her to come. In the midst of the handshakings I snatched glimpses of her and noted her progress with the slow moving file across the end of the room, then I saw her start up the side, and this gave me a full front view of her face. I saw her last when she was within 25 feet of me. For an hour I kept thinking she must still be in the room somewhere and would come at last, but I was disappointed.

When I arrived in the lecture room that evening some one said:

"Come into the waiting room; there's a friend of yours there who wants to see you. You'll not be introduced—you are to do the recognizing without help if you can."

I said to myself, "It's Mrs. R.; I shan't have any trouble."

There were perhaps ten ladies present, all seated. In the midst of them was Mrs. R., as I had expected. She was dressed exactly as she was when I had seen her in the afternoon. I came forward and shook hands with here and called her by name, and said:

"I knew you the moment you appeared at the reception this afternoon."

She looked very much surprised, and said:

"But I was not at the reception. I have just arrived from Quebec, and have not been in town an hour."

It was my turn to be surprised now. I said:

"I can't help it. I give you my word of honor that it is as I say. I saw you at the reception, and you were dressed precisely as you are now. When they told me a moment ago that I should find a friend in this room, your image rose before me, dress and all, just as I had seen you at the reception."

Those are the facts. She was not at the reception at all, or anywhere near it but I saw her there nevertheless, and most clearly and unmistakably. To that I could make oath. How is one to explain this? I was not thinking of her at the time; had not thought of her for years. But she had been thinking of me, no doubt; did her thoughts flit through leagues of air to me, and bring with it that clear and pleasant vision of herself? I think so. That was and remains my sole experience in the matter of apparitions—I mean apparitions that comes when one is (ostensibly) awake. I could have been asleep for a moment; the apparition could have been the creature of a dream.

Still, that is nothing to the point; the feature of interest is the happening of the thing just at that time, instead of an earlier or later time, which is argument that its origin lay in thought transference.—Harper's Magazine.

No Striking There.

There are now five tramps in the Allentown jail who are kept at work carrying pig iron, and, strange to relate, there have been no strikes so far. The hours are from 7:30 to 11:30 a. m., and 1 to 4:30 p. m. The rule of the prison, as applied to tramps, is "no work, no food," hence the absence of kicking.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

MORE THAN A SOCIAL RESORT

THE EDUCATIONAL PLANS OF THE Y. M. C. A. FOR THE WINTER.

Classes Will Be Organized in Different Branches, and a Busy Season is in Prospect—Religious Work Not to be Neglected

Many people look upon the Y. M. C. A. as merely furnishing a place where young men may pleasantly spend their evenings instead of going to some low resort. It does furnish that, but something more; it gives the young men who have had to leave school at an early age a chance to take up more extensively some of the necessary studies.

This year promises to be an active one in this line, as well as in the athletic department. One of the features of the educational department will be a complete mechanical course lasting three years. The first year includes mechanical arithmetic, algebra, mechanics, and mechanical drawing. Walter S. Timmis, a certified teacher of the Science and Arts Department, of London, will be in charge and will give instruction on Tuesday and Thursday nights.

To the young man, who has entered a business house as clerk or bookkeeper, the book-keeping and commercial course will be of practical use. The instruction in this course will be given by E. H. Bonnell, an experienced tercher and graduate of the Coleman Business college. He will be assisted in his work by George E. Fuller and Max Moraller.

The German classes will be under the instruction of Rev. F. Kionka, the same as last year. John C. Whiting, who has had several years experience as a teacher of shorthand, will have charge of the classes in that branch of learning. Arithmetic will be taught by Garrett Q. Packer.

Another important feature of the Y. M. C. A., is the special class in English for foreign-speaking young men, which will be under the charge of J. V. A. Craighead.

If a sufficient number wish to join, classes in commercial correspondence, Spanish, and vocal music will be formed.

A certificate will be given to those finishing the courses in book-keeping, shorthand and German, and in the mechanical course.

The educational department will be open on October 14th, when H. Coleman, president of the Coleman Business College, will make the opening address.

An entainment course has been almost arranged which provides for seven entertainments to take place during the winter. They will be free to all members paying $5 or over.

The religious work is also to be actively pushed this fall and winter. Much is to be done in Bible study and special Sunday afternoon meetings will be held through the winter and every effort possible will be made to make them a success.

One of the new lines of work planned for the winter will be a literary and debating club, which will be organized if there is a sufficient demand for it. A musical club, including vocal and instrumental, is also thought of. Social meetings will be held at which prominent Plainfielders will tell some of their experiences, amusing or thrilling, as the case may be.

The work in the junior department is not being overlooked in all the preparations for the young men. The $1 membership will give the use of the rooms to the boys while, the privilege of the physical department will be given to the $3 members.

The prospectus of the different departments of the Y. M. C. A. will be out this week and may be procured at the Y. M. C. A. building.

Property Well Located.

The sale of lots that Hand & McIntyre are going to have next Saturday afternoon, on South avenue near Berckman street, is going to be the place for anybody to buy a lot who wants to be within a few minutes' walk of a depot, with good flag sidewalks and a good neighborhood. Now that the Netherwood Hotel is sold property ought to advance in price in that section.

John G. Mauger Editor of the Sunbeam, Seligman, Mo., who named Grover Cleveland for the Presidency in November 1882, while he was Mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says: "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as staple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

HOLDUPS GALORE.

Two Plainfield Young Men Stopped on the Road to Dunellen.

There seems to be an epidemic of attempted highway robberies on the outskirts of this city during the last week. Another similar case occurred Sunday evening when Peter Fleming and Peter Winn were driving home from Dunellen late in the evening.

They were about half-way between Dunellen and Clinton avenue when two strange men jumped out from behind a shock of cornstalks. One grabbed the bridle of the horse and the other advanced toward the buggy. Luckily both of the young men were armed and immediately displayed their revolvers. The would-be robbers jumped back at the first show of fight and disappeared into the darkness.

Neither of the young men could describe the strangers as the night was quite dark and they had been unable to see.

Two young ladies employed in one of the big dry goods stores had an exciting adventure Saturday night about eleven o'clock while on their way home from work. They were proceeding along Grove street, and just as they reached the German Lutheran church a man jumped out from behind the fence and grabbed hold of them. The girls gave vent to their fright by a screech that proved to the man that he had tackled the wrong party and he quickly disappeared in the dark, while the young ladies ran up the street a short distance and stopped in a yard. After a time they mustered up courage enough to proceed on their way. The only description they could give of the man was that "he was a horrid looking thing."

MISS WARING'S DINNER.

Pleasant Social Event at the Home of O. T. Waring.

A very pleasant house party took place last evening at the residence of O. T. Waring, of Park avenue, when Miss Waring gave a dinner to a number of her out-of-town friends.

Among those present were: Miss Lillian Weller, of Newburgh; Miss Grace Weller, of Yonkers; Miss Lillie Lefferts, Heath Bartow and F. Raymond Lefferts, of New York; Sydney L. Smith, of Bergen Point; Jack McGonigal, of St. Augustine, Fla., and Howard Huntington, of Westchester.

JUST MISSED HIS EYE.

A Stone, Thrown By a Colored Girl, Strikes a Little Boy.

When the five-year-old son of Fred Conde, of Orchard place, was returning home from school yesterday noon a colored girl by the name of Jones threw a stone, striking the lad in the face just under the eye, cutting quite a deep gash. The colored girl was about twelve years old, and is said to be always in the habit of throwing stones. Mr. Conde has complained to the police, but on account of the tender age of the girl she has not been arrested.

Received Them in Pieces.

Councilman J. H. Howell and family, of Willow avenue, returned from their summer outing through Boston soon after the Knights Templar convention. Several days ago Mr. Howell received several packing boxes which contained all that remained of his trunks. At the immense trunk blockade in Boston they had been completely smashed, along with hundreds of other trunks.

There Are Thirteen.

Plainfield has quite an original organization in the Asbestos Club which meets every day in the Love building. Here they have a billiard table and here they play games and enjoy themselves generally. There are now thirteen members of the club and all the thirteen are expecting an accident to one of their comrades in consequence of the unlucky number.

Ten Days Without Trunks.

The Boston railway stations are said to be literally blockaded with baggage since the Knights Templar convention. The family of Asa Collier, although they have been home ten days, have seen nothing of their trunks as yet.

Strange and Sweet Melodies

The native African singers, six in number, will give one of their entertainments in Bethel chapel on Thursday evening of this week. Their sweet melodies have found favor wherever they have appeared.

Dance Postponed.

The Revere House Waiter postponed their dance which was to have been given last night until Thursday night on account of the inclement weather.

REPUBLICANS ELECT TONIGHT.

Places of Holding Primaries in the Various Wards.

Senator Foster Voorhees and Congressman Fowler were in this city yesterday working among local Republicans in the endeavor to get them to support the Senator at the Republican primaries this evening. In several of the wards contests will probably be made this evening.

The meeting places for the primaries will be as follows: First ward, Republican Association rooms on East Front street; Second ward, Bryant School building on East Sixth street; Third ward, Casino on West Seventh street; Fourth ward, Reform Hall on West Second street.

Been Fishing and Went To Sleep.

Two men from Elizabeth came to Plainfield yesterday and laid down near Stony brook and went to sleep. Chief Van Horn saw them, and thinking that they were drunk, arrested them with the help of Assistant Marshal Samuel Moore and brought them before Judge Crosley yesterday afternoon. The men claimed that they were peaceable citizens and had been fishing when they grew sleepy and laid down on the bank. They had no appearance of being drunk when brought to trial so the Judge released them.

KEAN'S CHANCE THE BEST.

HE IS EXPECTED TO RECEIVE 306 VOTES ON THE FIRST BALLOT.

His Friends Say He Will Be Nominated on the Second Ballot—Estimated Strength—Metcalf and the Democrats.

The fight for the Republican Gubernatorial nomination is growing fiercer, said The New York Sun of yesterday. The result of the primaries in Union county on Friday has given considerable strength to the canvass of Senator Voorhees, who previously had been regarded as practically out of the race. Ex-Congressman Kean's friends contend that he will carry the remaining districts in the county, which are to hold primaries this evening, and thus get a majority of the Union county delegates.

The outcome of the contest on Friday evening was not due so much to the sentiment in favor of Voorhees as to the efforts of a few of Mr. Kean's personal enemies in Elizabeth, who had the assistance of the friends of all the other Gubernatorial candidates. In fact, it was the field against Kean, and the exceedingly narrow margin by which the Kean delegates were defeated testifies to the fierceness of the struggle. Even the A.P.A., which has been taking an active interest in Republican politics in New Jersey for several months, was enlisted indirectly to down Mr. Kean, with the result that Senator Rogers, their candidate, secured two delegates.

Many estimates of the relative strength of the candidates on the first ballot have been made, but necessarily these are unsatisfactory, in view of the fact that about two-thirds of the delegates are yet to be chosen. A conservative estimate gives Kean 306, Griggs 263, Ward 144, Voorhees 63, and Rogers 66. The convention will contain 842 delegates, and Mr. Kean's friends contend that, when the break-up comes on the second ballot, the ex-Congressman will get more than the 422 votes needed to nominate him. The only man mentioned as yet for the temporary chairmanship of the convention is ex-Posmaster Thomas L. James, who is a resident of Bergen county.

LAST OF THE SUMMER DANCES.

The Casino the Scene of a Pleasurable Social Event.

The summer is over and most of Plainfield society is back again, and for that reason the last of the series of three subscription dances, which were held in the Casino this summer, was the best attended last evening. The cold and dampness of the evening outside was a great contrast to the gay life inside. The gliding couples, and the sweet strains of Elliot's orchestra from New York, made the Casino seem like a different place. Besides a large attendance of Plainfield people there were a number of visitors from out of town.

The committee in charge of the dances consisted of Howard Beebe, Laurens Van Buren, and Fred W. Walz, to whom the success of the dance was due.

Among those present, besides the regular subscribers, were: Miss Lillian Weller, of Newburgh, Miss Grace Weller, of Yonkers, Miss Lillie Lefferts, of New York, Miss Sydney Wharton, of Pittsburg, Miss Tift, of Tifton, Ga., Miss Allen, of Louisville, Heath Bartow, of New York, F. AN EVANGELIST CHARGED.

THE SOMERVILLE MURDER MYSTERY IS CLEARING UP.

Rev. Jacob S. Johnson is Accused of the Crime—Warrants Out for Others, Too—Robbery Was the Cause of the Deed.

Jacob S. Johnson, the colored preacher, at Somerville, was arrested yesterday charged with complicity in the killing of Annie Beekman, or Rogers, colored, whose body was found in the woods near the Raritan River bridge Sunday morning. Warrants were also issued late last night for the arrest of Mrs. Catherine Johnson, the suspected strangler's wife, and for two other inmates of the colored evangelist's hut. Johnson is now in the Somerville jail. He has retained Lawyers Steele & Meehan to defend him, and refuses to make a statement. State Attorney Nelson Y. Dungan said late last night that from evidence in his possession Johnson would have to stand trial for his life.

Robbery is believed to have been the motive for the horrible crime. The girl and all her friends are poor people, and $48 is a great deal of money to any of them. The murderer, in his feverish anxiety to gain possession of the strangled woman's savings, ripped her dress in several places, knowing that she carried her money in a beaded purse concealed in her corsage.

Johnson is about forty years old. He is quite short, stockily and powerfully built. His wife is five years younger and very tall. Both profess to be evangelists, and have until recently held camp meetings roundabout. Mrs. Johnson is a far better preacher than her husband.

The murdered woman was twenty-four years old. Two months ago she was married by Rev. Dr. Scott, of St. John's A. M. E. church, in Newark, to Thomas Rogers, a colored basket maker, seventy-two years old, of 27 Lock street.

TALK OF MORE BONDS

Rumors in Wall Street of Another Issue.

Assistant Secretary Curtis' Presence in New York Causes Much Wonder—Offers of Small Deposits of Gold Accepted by the Treasury. Reserve Below the "Dead Line."

New York, Sept. 17.—William E. Curtis, assistant secretary of the treasury, arrived in town yesterday, back from his recent trip to Bar Harbor. His presence in town and the conference he had here prior to his start for Bar Harbor with assistant treasurer Conrad N. Jordan of the United States sub-treasury and the members of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., have resulted in rumors that another government bonds issue is at hand. These rumors are numerous in Wall street to-day. The state of the government gold reserve, which has been reduced below the $100,000,000 mark by recent withdrawals of gold from the sub-treasury, the condition of the foreign exchanges and the apparent unfavorable prospects of any speedy improvement in the situation were pointed out as factors which make a bond issue probable.

Does Not Consider It Desirable.

Assistant Treasurer Jordan, when seen at the sub-treasury this morning said: "I have not held any conference or joined in any discussion about a government bond issue with Mr. Curtis or anybody else except in an informal way. A great many well-informed financiers, including, I believe, J. P. Morgan, do not consider a new government bond issue desirable at the present time. Mr. J. P. Morgan when seen had no statement to make in regard to the bond issue rumors.

LOWEST POINT YET REACHED.

Gold Reserve This Morning Stood at $95,348,642.

Washington, Sept. 17.—The true treasury gold reserve stood at the opening of business to-day at $95,348,642, the lowest point reached since the last bond issue raised the reserve above the $100,000,000 mark.

No Occasion for a New Issue.

If there is any intention on the part of the government to place a new issue of bonds, prior to October 1, Secretary Carlisle declines to admit it. He says that he is no way responsible for the sensational reports floating around in financial circles, and he cannot undertake to confirm or deny them. So far as the present condition of the treasury is concerned, there is no occasion for a new issue of bonds, and those treasury officers who are usually in the confidence of the secretary in making the preliminary arrangements for such a transaction assert positively that there is nothing in sight to indicate such an act on the part of the government.

NEW YORK REPUBLICANS.

All is Harmony at the State Convention at Saratoga.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Bright and early were the horde of republican politicians astir this morning all prepared for the work of the day. All the big and little republican leaders, all the delegates, all the good republicans, who always attend conventions whether they are delegates or not, are here. They came from all parts of the Empire state, but they apparently had no log-rolling to do here, as no booms were in sight. All the talk of "new blood on the ticket" ceased when the statesmen stepped from the cars. The entire drift of opinion this morning was toward the old ticket, and no one was swimming against the stream. The factional fight had been apparently fought elsewhere and the "regulars" were to have everything their own way here, and the convention will go down in history as one of the most harmonious on record. It is a great victory for Platt. Strong as was his position last year, it is stronger to-day. The platform was practically completed at midnight last night. It contains no reference to excise. It is possible, though not probable, that there may be inserted in it the plank of 1894. The position of the New York city delegation is that it agreed to take the initiative in bringing the subject before the convention, beyond that everything is left to the discretion of the individual delegates. There are some who are endeavoring to induce an Erie county delegate to introduce the question of locla option. It is, however, doubtful if this can be done.

RUMORS OF A RACE

Defender and Valkyrie May Again Meet.

Dunraven Said To Be Disgusted with His Present Standing with Americans—Indications That He Is Negotiating for a Herreshoff Boat To Beat the Niagara.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 17.—Steam yacht Conqueror left the harbor quite unexpectedly shortly after 9:30 o'clock last night on some unknown errand. Shortly before 9 o'clock, when the stores were all closed, the crew were bustling about the streets for supplies, and at 9:20 F. W. Vanderbilt's carriage drove down to the yacht club and Mr. Vanderbilt and H. Maitland Kersey alighted. They at once boarded the Conqueror's steam launch, which shoved off. Soon the Conqueror herself got under way and proceeded to westward. Rumor has it that while Dunraven remains here these two gentlemen will endeavor to arrange more racing with Defender, as Dunraven is accredited with being quite disgusted with his present standing with the American people.

AFTER AN AMERICAN BOAT.

Dunraven Probably Negotiating with the Herreshoffs.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 17.—Lord Dunraven and H. Maitland Kersey took a sail on F. W. Vanderbilt's yacht Conqueror yesterday afternoon, and information is received that John B. Herreshoff and Nathaniel Herreshoff were also on board. The yacht first headed outside, then as a huge steamer hove in sight it came about and under cover of the steamer proceeded up the bay, being last seen heading in toward Bristol, where it is understood the party quietly landed at Herreshoff's boat shop. A knowing party said, as he observed the yacht heading up the bay, that the purpose of the trip was to continue the little talk begun in the pilot house of the City of Bridgeport in New York, when it is alleged that the subject of Herreshoffs building a 40-rater to beat the Niagara was discussed. If Dunraven is talking of a new boat and that too of American build for racing purposes, there is assuredly a grand surprise for yachting circles.

ALMOST BEYOND BELIEF

Here is a Story From Orange, Mass.

The Facts Are Certainly of an Interesting Nature.

The Tale as Told By the Lady Herself in Her Own Words.

The poet Alexander Pope says:

"A wise physician, skilled in wounds to heal,
Is more than armies to the public weal.
But, who shall decide when doctors disagree?

This question was brought forcibly to mind by a recent occurrence which happened in Orange, Mass. It seems—but we will let Mrs. Wm. Lamson, who resides in that town, tell the story in her own way.

"Four years ago I was very sick. I had been sick for three years before. My trouble was turn of life. I was confined to the bed for three years. I suffered great pain and came very near losing my life.

"I did but just live, just escaped the grave. I employed two doctors and derived no benefit from them. Mrs. David Goddard, of Orange, Mass., who had been cured by Dr. Green's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, advised me to use Nervura.

MRS. WM. LAMSON.

"I was confined to my bed when I began to use the medicine. I gradually began to improve, and have now used five bottles and am entirely cured. I do hard work every day, and firmly believe that if I had not used Dr. Green's Nervura I should now have been in my grave. That put me on my fact when all else failed. I do not now suffer any pain, and enjoy good health from the benefits I derived from the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"I have often recommended its use to other suffering people, and I send this letter for the benefit of others."

It would appear that this letter plainly answered our opening question.

If doctors disagree about your case, if you have tried physician after physician, and are still not cured, follow the example of Mrs. Lamson and use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Remember that it will help you even if all else has failed, even if through those repeated failures to be cured, you are discouraged and in despair of getting well. This grand remedy has saved thousands of persons worse off than you are, and it will make you well and strong if you will use it.

It is purely vegetable and harmless, and is the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City, the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. The Doctor can be consulted in all cases free, personally or by letter.

LOOK IN THE CLOSET

SEE if you can't find some old clothes that you have put aside because of the worn-out look they have, or some clothes that are badly spotted.

We want you to bring any old clothes of that sort to us—or better yet—we'll send for them.

We propose to clean those clothes—or to dye them for you—either way to make them wearable. This is an economical suggestion.

We take out grease spots so they stay out, or we dye clothes with a color that wears. We charge as little as poasible for the work.

Just a dollar or two—and you'll have a lot of new clothes.

REBELS USE DYNAMITE

Spanish Officers and Soldiers Blown to Pieces.

One Company Becomes Terrorized and Go Over to the Insurgents—A Spanish Deserter Captured and Shot in the Presence of All the Troops in the City.

Santiago de Cuba, Sept 7, via Key West, Fla., Sept. 17.—In the engagement between Spanish Col. Cannelas and Jose Maceo in Santa Maria Savigne, near Ramon de las Yaguas on Aug. 31, the rebels had prepared more than sixty holes filled with dynamite on the different roads the troops had to pass. When the engagement was over a Spanish regiment marched past one of the traps and the dynamite exploded, blowing to pieces Lieut. Francisco Ruiz, Capt. Gregorio Romero, and thirteen soldiers. When the troops saw this they were so filled with terror that an entire company deserted to the rebels and remained with them.

Spanish Deserter Shot.

During the engagement between Spanish Gen. Linares and rebel leader Rabi, in Descanao del Muerto, near Bemanganaguas, the Spaniards took a Spanish soldier prisoner, who had joined the insurgents at the beginning of the revolution. His name was Pedro Rovira Esterez, and he belonged to the regiment of Havana. He was brought to the city, tried by court-martial and sentenced to death. He was shot this morning in front of the slaughter house in the presence of all the troops that were in the city. He was so weak he had to be taken to the place of execution in a carriage. This is the first execution of a rebel in this city. He was taken prisoner because during the engagement he went into the Spanish ranks to obtain arms, and killed a Spanish lieutenant and a Cuban mulatto.

AUTOMATIC ROAD CARRIAGES.

The Test in France in Which Petroleum Proved to Be the Best Propelling Agent.

The time seems approaching when automatic road carriages, propelled by steam, electricity, or petroleum, will come into general use and take away from the patient horse the worst part of his daily toil. The odds at present seem to be rather in favor of petroleum. A most interesting competition has recently taken place in France between various species of motor carriages, which the United States Consul at Havre describes in a report to the State Department. The course prescribed was from Paris to Bordeaux, a distance of 358 miles and back again, any vehicle to stand disqualified if it consumed more than 100 hours on the road. The big prize of the day (7,720) was won by a two seated carriage, making the round trip in 24 hours and 53 minutes. The winning carriages were propelled by gasoline, and the rate of speed was about 15 miles an hour, which is regarded as an extremely creditable performance, the long lines of hills being taken into account. These hills appear to have proved too much for the carriages propelled by electricity, of which only one got through, the others having abandoned the contest.

One of the steam carriages was brought to a standstill at Versailles early in the race, owing to an accident, and the others lost time by frequent stoppages of five and ten minutes, made for the purpose of taking in coal and water. The electrical conveyances had also to stop from time to time to renew their dynamitic charges, but the petroleum machines carried enough force for a twenty-four hours' run, and on the return journey the run was made without a single stop.

In comparing the merits of the different propelling agents, the palm must, so far, be awarded to petroleum, which is clean and can be easily carried. The ordinary fender used for short distances contains less than four quarts of oil, which will last a journey of twenty miles, or two and one-half hours. For long distances a receptacle capable of holding enough petroleum for a run of at least twenty or twenty-four hours is provided.

Cycles propelled by petroleum have also excited great interest, and half a dozen of such machines started in the race at Bordeaux, one at least holding its own among the larger vehicles. It is believed that light petroleum bicycles, tricycles, and even four-wheelers will soon come into general use, which the Consul says will tend to relieve lady cyclists from the necessity of wearing short skirts.

When Mrs. Vanderbilt Ran a Tavern.

"Many are the gay dances we used to have in that old house," said Isaac Van Duzer, as he related reminiscences of the old Van Duzer mansion on Staten Island, which was recently demolished to give room for a more modern structure. "The best-looking men and the handsomest girls used to come from all over the island to dance in the big hallway. There were two things from which the old house was free. No spook was ever seen there, and George Washington never slept under the roof. During the Revolutionary War the British soldiers were encamped all around the house, and my grandfather used to tell me how he had to feed some of them. No members of my family ever went to war. They stayed at home and attended to business.

"I don't believe any man knew Commodore Vanderbilt better than my grandfather and my father. Commodore Vanderbilt owned that big white house next to the old house, and of evenings the Commodore would come over and play cards with my grandfather. Yes, and they didn't play for fun, either.

"The Commodore was a pretty stiff gambler when he felt in the mood. When he would win he would be in a good humor, but when he lost he was an unpleasant man to meet. He was usually captain of one of his ferryboats, and mornings after he had had good luck at cards he would give each member of his crew 50 cents. But, if he lost during a night at cards, he would invariably say the next morning, 'Shove her off, every damn one of you, and let her go.'

"The Commodore's wife was as full of energy as he. When the Commodore ran the stage and water line from Tompkinsville to New Brunswick Mrs. Vanderbilt ran a hotel at New Brunswick. Mrs. Vanderbilt would tend bar, serve drinks to the guests, and be manager in general. Mrs. Vanderbilt made more money then than her husband."

Tender Heart and Ragged Coat.

That a tender heart often lies beneath a ragged coat was well illustrated by a little incident which attracted the attention of a number of pedestrians near Twentieth street and Montgomery avenue, the other morning.

A happy tot was crossing the avenue with a tri colored penny kite trailing behind, when the string broke and the frail paper toy fell in the middle of the street. The child was about to return in order to pick it up, but feared to run the risk of being run over by a catamaran—a high wheeled truck used to haul stone—which was coming down the avenue, drawn by a long line of fourteen horses, and carrying a block of stone weighing perhaps five tons. The driver, a big, rough Irishman, noticed the child's dilemma, and thinking, perhaps of a little one of his own, halted the cavalcade and beckoned to the youngster to pick up the precious kite. Still, the child hesitated, seeing which the driver left his horses and handed the toy to its owner. The bystanders smiled, the child laughed and the Irishman shouted: "Git up!"—Philadelphia Record.

As Seen by Him.

Dusty Dales—Say, Rogers, do you believe in dat old sayin' wot says: "It's a poor rule dat won't work both way?

Restful Rogers (decisively)—No. It's a poor rule to work at all.—

REBELLION IN CHINA

Fears Again for the Safety of Missionaries.

Officials of Heng Leng Flee, Leaving the People to the Mercy of the Rebels—Foreign Gunboats Will Demand Execution of the Kucheng Sentences.

Hong Kong, Sept. 17.—It is reported that a rebellion has broken out on the border of the province of Fo Kien. The insurgents are said to have occupied the town of Heng Leng, from which the officials fled, leaving the people to the mercy of the rebels, against whom a detachment of imperial troops has been sent.

ANXIETY FOR MISSIONARIES.

The Foo Chow Insurrection May Again Place Them in Danger.

Washington, Sept. 17.—The chief interest attaching in Washington to the dispatch from Foo Chow that a rebellion has begun in the provinces of Fo-Kien is as to the fate which awaits the American and European missionaries in that province, should any still remain in the vicinity of Kucheng. Reports reached here through diplomatic and private sources several weeks ago that the missionaries, after the recent massacres in the interior of the province, had with their families sought refuge at Foo Chow, which is near the coast, and where the presence of foreign men-of-war make them safe from further violence. If they have remained at Foo Chow, or, rather at Pagoda anchorage, which is a foreign settlement, only a few miles removed, no danger can happen to them. If, however, in their zeal to begin again their work of Christianizing the natives they have returned to the interior of the province, the gravest apprehensions will be felt for their safety.

TO FORCE CHINA.

Gunboats Demand Execution of Sentence of Kucheng Rioters.

Foo Chow, Sept. 17.—In consequence of the attitude of obstruction assumed by the Chinese officers toward the progress of the inquiry into the recent outrages at Kucheng, and their refusal to carry out the sentences imposed by the examining court upon the ringleaders in the attacks upon the Christian missions at that place, two foreign gunboats have been ordered to ascend the river to demand the enforcement of the penalties imposed.

Consider the Inquiry a Mockery.

London, Sept. 17.—The Times to-day publishes a dispatch from Shanghai saying that the Chinese regard the inquiry into the massacre of Christians at Kucheng as a mockery, and have begun to release the prisoners without consulting the British consul.

THE CHOLERA AT HONOLULU.

The City of Rio de Janeiro in Quarantine at San Francisco.

San Francisco, Sept. 17.—The steamship City of Rio de Janeiro, from China via Honolulu, arrived early yesterday. Reports about the cholera are expected by her, but she is still detained in quarantine. Neither passengers nor mails are allowed to land, and no communication is permitted. The mails will be fumigated.

THE KILLING OF STOKES.

One Hundred of His Porters Also Shot by Order of Lothaire.

London, Sept. 17.—Mr. Greene, M. P., publishes a letter from an important English official in Uganda saying that Major Lothaire, the Belgian officer who ordered the execution of the British trader Stokes, shot one hundred of Mr. Stokes's porters, besides seizing all of Mr. Stokes's ivory and baggage.

TO DIE IN THE ELECTRIC CHAIR

Sentences Imposed on Charles N. Davis and George Smith.

Albany, Sept. 17.—Judge Rumsey sentenced Charles N. Davis, the murderer of 6-year-old Anna May Shannon of Cohoes, and George Smith, convicted of the murder of an old man named Richtmeyer, to die at Dannemora prison during the week beginning October 28 next.

Society Wedding at Toronto.

Toronto, Sept. 17.—Miss Mary Ada Beatrice Moss, daughter of Charles Moss, Q. C., and a very well known and popular society lady, was married Tuesday afternoon to Samuel Squire Sprigge, of London, England, sub-editor of the Lancet, the leading medical paper in Great Britain.

Cranberry Crop Damaged by Frost.

Buzzards Bay, Mass., Sept. 17.—Reports received from various localities of the Cape Cod cranberry district indicate considerable damage by Sunday night's frost. The loss, however, is confined almost entirely to those bogs which have no facilities for flooding.

Relief Appeals for Armenians.

New York, Sept. 17.—Herant Mesrob Kiretchjian, general secretary of the Armenian relief association, has issued an appeal to the newspaper press of the United States to call at once for contributions for the deliverance of the Armenian people.

Wages Increased.

Philadelphia, Sept. 17.—The narrow-loom rug weavers employed on piece work in John Bromley & Son's mill on Lehigh avenue, announce that an increase of 10 per cent. in wages has been voluntarily granted them by the firm.

Irving Opens at Montreal.

Montreal, Sept. 17.—Sir Henry Irving opened his American tour at the Academy of Music in this city last night. The opening production was Faust in five acts. It met with a flattering reception.

Second Test of the Iowa's Armor.

Washington, Sept. 17.—The side armor of the battleship Iowa will be subjected to another test to-day at Indian Head.

A good road is the main artery of traffic. A village whose approaches are accessible and well kept is bound to thrive. A poor road at once brands the country wherein it exists as retrogressive or bankrupt and not worth traversing.—Flemington Democrat.

Wednesday last, the 11th inst., the terms of office of the members of the various district boards of registry and election began, and will terminate on the 10th of September, 1896, or when their successors are appointed and have qualified. They are required to meet within ten days after their appointment for organization. They must take the official oath before performing any duty and forward it to the county clerk.—Camden Democrat.

Supreme Court Justice Magie filed his dissenting opinion yesterday in the case brought by Lay Judge Herman Schalk of Essex county to test the constitutionality of the elective Judiciary law. Justice Magie says he is unable to agree with Justices VanSyckel and Lippincott, as he has not found any clear and undoubted discrepancy between the law and the Constitution. On the contrary, he thinks that under the construction given and acquiesced in for forty years, and approved by an adjudication of the Supreme Court, the power is conferred upon the Legislature to pass the law in question. Justice Magie explains at considerable length his views, and concludes that the County Judiciary law should be upheld and the mandamus asked for refused.

A COMMON CAUSE OF SICKNESS.

In Warm Weather Nothing so Dangerous as Decayed Foods.

Every one knows or ought to know that decayed foods are poisonous. Boards of Health seek to prevent their sale.

We now have in mind the results which follow the decay and decomposition of foods after they have been eaten, for unless digestion occurs within a reasonable time after our meals, decomposition sets in.

If dyspeptics will stop and consider for a moment some of the symptoms of their trouble, such as disagreeable breath, eructations of gas or bad taste in the mouth, they will understand that they all must come from decaying foods that ought properly to have been absorbed into the system.

Spots before the eyes, dizziness, sleeplessness, dyspeptic headaches are but a few of the effects following the absorption into the blood of poisons developed from decomposing and undigested food that lies in the stomach.

It was a recognition of this important fact that caused the Mount Lebanon Shakers to devote so much of their time to the preparation of a remedy for dyspepsia, and nothing is more efficient than the Digestive Cordial which they have recently placed on the market.

Its action is so prompt that relief frequently follows the very first dose. It restores the appetite and increases the weight. Plumpness and strength take the place of weakness and that care-worn expression which points out the dyspeptics in every community. The local druggist are now giving away interesting descriptive pamphlets.

Try a twenty-five cent bottle of Digestive Cordial and see what it will do for you.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

PROMOTER ROBBINS'S CHECKS.

Many Were Protested and Numerous Inquiries Being Made for the Man.

William M. Robbins, a promoter, having an office in New York, who has been a resident of Westfield for a year past, left town Sunday night, and now many tradesmen are mourning his departure and sadly contemplating many reminders of him in the shape of protested checks and drafts.

When Robbins came to Westfield he rented, under an agreement to purchase, a place on Dudley avenue, belonging to John T. Lawrence. It is one of the handsomest residences in that town. Mrs. Robbins opened it as a boarding-house and through liberal advertising soon had the place filled with boarders. Everything seemed to be prosperous with the Robbinses, and the local tradesmen gave them unlimited credit. Mr. Robbins made many acquaintances, and from the stories he told his new friends thought him a clever man and a successful promoter who was making plenty of money.

About three months ago matters seemed to take a turn, and occasionally the checks given by Mr. Robbins would be returned by the Westfield Bank, protested. Each time Mr. Robbins succeeded in explaining the matter to the satisfaction of the holder of the check, and promised to make it right in a few days.

During the past few weeks the protested checks have been numerous and the holders grew anxious. Investigation at the County Clerk's office showed that the elegant furniture and horses and wagons used by the Robbinses were all covered by a chattel mortgage to John T. Lawrence, the owner of the house, and that they had nothing that could be held for the payment of the checks.

ROMANTIC JUSTUS MORRIS.

The Frivolities of Cupid Playing With an Ex-Freeholder.

Word was received in Elizabeth yesterday that ex-Freeholder Justus Morris, one of the largest property-owners in the city, and who is seventy-four years old, had quietly married on Saturday, Miss Annie Hergert, twenty-two years old, who has for some time been his housekeeper. Mr. Morris lives in Linden township, near Rahway, and caused a stir in the community nearly two years ago by announcing his engagement to Miss Fannie Howard, of Liberty street, Elizabeth, whom he was to marry on Christmas Day, 1893, but he afterward jilted her. Mr. Morris was taken suddenly ill with pneumonia on the day before the wedding was to come off, and it had to be postponed. For nearly two months he lay in a critical condition. Miss Howard attended him faithfully during his illness, but his love for her cooled after his recovery, and when pressed to name a date for the ceremony he announced that the match was broken off.

Through counsel she brought suit against Mr. Morris in the New Jersey Supreme Court for $20,000 damages for breach of promise. At the Sheriff's office it was said yesterday that Mr. Morris had settled the suit by paying the plaintiff $26,000.

Notable Theatrical Event.

Theatre-goers in this city are much interested in the coming of Edward Harrigan on Thursday evening in Music Hall. Mr. Harrigan has not produced "Old Lavender" for something like nine years, and it is remembered by his admirers as one of the best things he has ever produced. "Old Lavender," as it will be given on Thursday next, is less boisterous than most of his other productions, and inclines more to the melodramatic. It shows a convivial gentleman—Harrigan himself—who is a cashier in his brother's bank, and a scheming villain, who runs away with the banker's wife. The brother is unjustly suspected with complicity, is discharged and becomes a homeless wander around the docks. The happy reunion of the brothers is, fortunately, postponed until the end of the third act, for in the meantime Mr. Harrigan has an opportunity to do some clever character acting. Mrs. Yeamans has her old well-fitting part of "Mother Crawford," the deaf proprietress of a sailors' boarding house, and John Wild reappears as "Smoke," the inimitable dog-stealing darkey. Seats on sale at Leggett's drug store.

—G. Thorn, the photographic artist, of East Front street, visited the refinery of the Tide Water Oil Co., at Bayonne yesterday, where he took several views of the new electric light and power plant.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Captain Charles C. Lister, of the Crescent Wheelmen, announces a run to Lorraine for Thursday evening.

P. V. Bergen, of Bound Brook, rode to Plainfield on his wheel yesterday and spent the afternoon with his friend, J. VanEps, of Park avenue.

The rain of last night left the road to New Brunswick in splendid condition and a number of cyclists, both masculine and otherwise, turned out to enjoy it.

The Y. M. C. A. bicycle club will have a run to New Brunswick on Thursday evening. The start will be made from the Y. M. C. A. building at seven o'clock. All members of the club are invited to be on hand.

J. VanEps and family took a wheeling trip to New Brunswick Sunday. About a mile from this city Mrs. VanEps punctured her tire and had to walk home to have it repaired. When she just reached New Brunswick and started to cross Albany street bridge the valve to one of her tires gave out and she had to walk again. It was finally repaired and they reached home safely.

MARK TWAIN'S INTEGRITY.

He Will Work Hard to Pay 100 Cents on the Dollar.

Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) just before starting for Australia said in an interview:

"It has been reported that I sacrificed for the benefit of my creditors, the property of the firm whose financial backer I was, and that I am now lecturing for my own benefit. This is an error. I intend the lectures, as well as the property, for the creditors.

"The law recognizes no mortgage on a man's brain, and a merchant who has given up all he has may take advantage of the rules of insolvency and start free again for himself; but I am not a business man, and honor is a harder master than law. It cannot compromise for less than 100 cents on the dollar and its debts never outlaw.

"I had a two-thirds interest in the publishing firm whose capital I furnished. If the firm had prospered I should have expected to collect two-thirds of the profits. As it is, I expect to pay all the debts. My partner has no resources, and I do not look for assistance from him. By far the largest single creditor of this firm is my wife, whose contributions in cash from her private means have nearly equaled the claims of all the others combined.

"In satisfaction of this great and just claim she has taken nothing, except to avail herself of the opportunity of retaining control of the copyrights of my books, which, for many easily understood reasons, of which financial ones are the least, we do not desire to see it in the hands of strangers.

"The present situation is that the wreckage of the firm, together with what money I can scrape together with my wife's aid, will enable me to pay the other creditors about 50 per cent. of their claims. It is my intention to ask them to accept that as a legal discharge and trust to my honor to pay the other 50 per cent. as fast as I can earn it. From my reception thus far on my lecturing tour, I am confident that if I live I can pay off the last debt within four years, after which, at the age of sixty-four, I can make a fresh and unencumbered start in life.

"I do not enjoy the hard travel and broken rest inseparable from lecturing, and if it had not been for the imperious moral necessity of paying these debts, which I never contracted, but which were accumulated on the faith of my name by those who had a presumptive right to use it, I should never have taken to the road at my time of life. I could have supported myself comfortably by writing; but writing is too slow for the demands that I have to meet, therefore I have begun to lecture my way around the world. I am going to Australia, India and South Africa, and next year I hope to make a tour of the great cities of the United States. In my preliminary run through the smaller cities on the northern route I have found a reception the cordiality of which has touched my heart and made me feel how small a thing money is in comparison with friendship."

The Amenities of Trade.

The brusque behavior of the newsboys one to another, their constant quarreling and frequent fights, all of which is usually the result of the fierce competition among them, might lead the casual observer to think they were all bitter enemies, or at least that the very nature of their business and their keen competition would make them little disposed toward helpfulness one to another. But the opposite is the case as a rule. There is a close comradeship and a spirit of mutual helpfulness among the belligerent little fellows not excelled in any other branch of active business life. They will almost tear each other to pieces fighting over a chance to sell a one-cent paper, but once the customer is secured by any one boy the others will turn at once and help him out if he needs their aid in any way. A close observer may see many instances of this.

One notable illustration, and of a kind very common, was noticed on Park Row at the bridge entrance yesterday. A pedestrian put his hand in his waistcoat pocket, and was immediately assailed by half a dozen newsboys thrusting papers at him. They pushed and jostled each other while the prospective customer was getting his money, and all melted away when he took a paper from one of their number. The little fellow had not change for the quarter tendered in payment, and darted off in a store near by to get change. He was unable to get the money right away, and the customer waited outside a short time. His waiting there attracted the attention of several of the boys who had fought for his custom, and they came back. One said:

"How much change do you want, mister?"

"Twenty-three cents," was the reply.

The boy searched his pocket, but couldn't scrape up enough change, as it was very early in the morning. He counted out seventeen cents, and two other boys made up the difference, and then the first said:

"That's all right, mister. Don't wait. Shorty will settle up."

There are some men in some trades who would carefully avoid being as helpful to a competitor as these boys were to each other.—New York Sun.

Something in It.

On an upturned basket near a Gypsy camp sat the oracle of fate, and many of the visitors at Sharon Springs held out soft hands to be examined and were duly astonished by the prophecies of future love, money or matrimony. During a lull in the business of palmistry, and after I had secured the aged man's confidence, I asked:

"My aged friend, as between man and man, tell me, is there anything in it?"

"Cert'n, cert'n. They's, on the average, about 50 cents a head intew it."

He winked laboriously, took up his basket and crawled under the wagon with the other animals.—Judge.

CATTLE HORNS IN DEMAND.

They Are Highly Prized as Ornaments in the West.

Of the hundreds of thousands of cattle brought into Kansas City alive every year and either taken out dead or not taken out at all in any recognizable form, it is to be presumed that the majority have horns. These horns are not a part of the frozen, canned, corned or otherwise preserved carcasses of beef that leave the city in the unending procession of yellow freight cars.

Neither are they piled up anywhere in the packing-house district as they used to pile up buffalo bones out West awaiting the coming of the agents who bought them for fertilizers.

Then what becomes of the tons of horn that are brought into Kansas City every year through the medium of the stock yards?

While pondering this inquiry to himself a reporter for the New York Times stumbled upon some interesting facts concerning Kansas City's infant industries last week and incidentally discovered where at least a portion of the horns go to.

In the first place, it is not to be supposed that so utilitarian a business as that carried on within the walls of the big packing houses would suffer an important element to go to waste. Some one has said that when a steer enters the doors of a Kansas City packing house there is no part of him that is not put to some important use, except, perhaps, the animal's expiring bellow.

Even that may be utilized in time. At any rate, the horns of a Texas steer form no inconsiderable part of his fighting weight, and if they could not be put to some remunerative use the packers would soon insist upon having a little more steer and a little less horn.

Years ago, when Missouri was little more than a densely wooded wilderness, and Kansas did not exist, there was one article that the frontiersman invariably possessed. His hut might be lowly and of unhewn logs, his bunk a miserable makeshift, and his table and chairs of the utmost simplicity, but by the door there hung the inevitable gunrack in the shape of a pair of branching antlers, and across these reposed the settler's trusty rifle.

In many cabins there were perhaps several magnificent pairs of antlers, and others could be had for the exercise of a little skill and courage.

But the passage of time and advancing civilization has changed all this. What then might be had almost for the asking has become an expensive luxury. The rifle of the settler has given place to the umbrella or cane of the modern citizen. His primitive shot pouch and powder horn have had to make way in the front hall for the shining silk hat and immaculate gloves. But the demand for a rack is still active and unfulfilled. Only the citizen of the rural Southwest can no longer afford or is able to procure the proud antlers of the deer, and in their place is compelled to take the horns of a lowly and luckless steer.

No Collision Needed.

They were riding on a Detroit and Windsor ferryboat the other evening—he and she—and some of the passengers noticed that their chairs were very close together.

That was nobody's business, however, and the boat continued to dance o'er the rippling waves like an antelope coursing the plains. By and by, as the great white moon suddenly hid her silvery face behind a cloud which came loafing along, the young man heaved a sigh and said:

"I wish we'd run into another boat!"

"Oh, my!" shrieked the golden-haired angel beside him as she choked over a gumdrop.

"Or another boat would run into us!"

"Oh, dear, how awful!"

Then the great white moon got further and further behind the loafing cloud, and the angel queried:

"Why do you wish for a collision?"

"Because it would throw you back on my shoulder, and then I should put my arm around you and——"

There was no collision, but her willowy form slowly swayed over until it rested on his shoulder-blade, and then his right arm stole and stole around her waist, and as he reached up his hand and took her peachy ear between his thumb and finger the old codger six feet away who had been trying to catch all they said turned away and remarked:

"If such things hain't stopped I'm goin' to quit riding on these 'ere boats!"—Detroit Free Press.

On Hand All Right.

Little Jack prays every night for all the different members of his family. His father had been away one time for a short journey, and that night Jack was praying for him as usual.

"Bless papa and take care of him," he was beginning as usual, when suddenly he raised his head and listened.

"Never mind about it now, Lord, ended the little fellow, "I hear him down in the hall."—Albany State.

CHAPTER I.

IN the days of Rudolph the Third there stood on the hill opposite the Castle of Zenda and on the other side of the valley in which the town lies, on the site where the Chateau of Tarlenheim now is situated, a fine and strong castle belonging to Count Nikolas of Festenburg. He was a noble of very old and high family and had great estates; his house being, indeed, second only to the royal house in rank and reputation. He himself was a young man of great accomplishments, of a domineering temper and of much ambition; and he had gained distinction in the wars that marked the closing years of the reign of King Henry the Lion. With King Rudolph he was not on terms of cordial friendship, for he despised the king's easy manners and carelessness of dignity, while the king had no love for a gentleman whose one object seemed to be to surpass and outshine him in the eyes of his people, and who never rested from extending and fortifying his castle until it threatened to surpass Zenda itself both in strength and magnificence. Moreover Nikolas, although maintaining a state ample and suitable to his rank, was yet careful and prudent, while Rudolph spent all that he received and more besides, so that the count grew richer and the king poorer. But in spite of these causes of difference, the count was received at court with apparent graciousness, and no open outburst of enmity had yet occurred, the pair being, on the contrary, often together and sharing their sports and pastimes with one another.

Now most of these diversions were harmless or indeed becoming and proper, but there was one among them full of danger to a man of hot head and ungoverned impulse such as King Rudolph was. And this one was dicing, in which the king took great delight, and in which Count Nikolas was very ready to encourage him. The king, who was generous and hated to win from poor men or those who might be playing beyond their means in order to give him pleasure, was delighted to find an opponent whose purse was as long or longer than his own, and thus came gradually to pass many evenings with the boxes in Nikolas' company. And the more evenings he passed the deeper he fell into the count's debt; for the king drank wine, while the count was content with small beer, and when the king was losing he doubled his stakes, whereas the count took in sail if the wind seemed adverse. Thus always and steadily the debt grew; till at last Rudolph dared not reckon how large it had become, nor did he dare to disclose it to his advisers. For there were great public burdens already imposed by reason of King Henry's wars, and the citizens of Streisau were not in a mood to bear fresh exactions nor to give their hard earnings for the payment of the king's gambling debts; in fine, although they loved the Elphbergs well enough, they loved their money more. Thus the king had no resource, except in his private possessions, and these were of no great value, saving the castle and estate of Zenda.

At length, when they had sat late one night and the throws had gone all the evening against the king and for Nikolas, the king flung himself back in his chair, drained his glass, and said impatiently:

"I am weary of the game! Come, my lord, let us end it."

"I would not urge you, sire, a moment beyond what you desire. I play but for your pleasure."

"Then my pleasure has been your profit," said the king with a vexed laugh, "for I believe I am stripped of my last crown. What is my debt?"

The count, who had the whole sum reckoned on his tablets, took them out and showed the king the amount of the debt.

"I cannot pay it," said Rudolph. "I would play you again, to double the debt, or wipe it out, but I have nothing of value enough to stake."

The desire which had been nursed for long in the count's heart, now saw the moment of its possible realization. He leant over the table, and, smoothing his beard with his hand, said gently:

"The amount is no more than half the value of your Majesty's castle and demesne of Zenda."

The king started and forced a laugh.

"Aye, Zenda spoils the prospect from Festenburg, does it?" said he. "But I will not risk Zenda. An Elphberg without Zenda would seem like a man robbed of his wife. We have had it since we have had anything or been anything. I should not seem king without it."

"As you will, sire. Then the debt stands?" And he looked full and keenly into the king's eyes, asking without words, "How will you pay it?" and adding without words, "Paid it must be." And the king read the unspoken words in the eyes of Count Nikolas.

The king took up his glass, but finding it empty, flung it angrily on the floor, where it shivered to fragments at Count Nikolas' feet; and he shifted in his chair and cursed softly under his breath. Nikolas sat with the dice-box in his hand and a smile on his lips; for he knew that the king could not pay, and therefore must play, and he was in the vein and did not doubt winning from the king Zenda and its demesne. Then he would be the greatest lord in the kingdom and hold for his own a kingdom within the kingdom and the two strongest places in all the land. And a greater prize might then dangle in reach of his grasp.

"The devil spurs and I gallop," said the king at last. And he took up the dice-box and rattled it.

"Fortune will smile on you this time, sire, and I shall not grieve at it," said Count Nikolas with a courteous smile.

"Curses on her!" cried the king. "Come, my lord, a quick ending to it! One throw, and I am a free man, or you are master of my castle."

"One throw let it be, sire, for it grows late," assented Nikolas with a careless air; and they both raised the boxes and rattled the dice inside them. The king threw; his throw was a six and a five, and a sudden gleam of hope lit up his eyes; he leant forward in his chair, gripping the elbows of it with his hands; and his cheek flushed and his breath came quickly. With a bow Count Nikolas raised his hand and threw. The dice fell and rolled on the table. The king sank back; and the count said, with a smile of apology and a shrug of his shoulders:

"Indeed I am ashamed. For I cannot be denied to-night."

For Count Nikolas of Festenburg had thrown sixes, and thereby won from the king the castle and demesne of Zenda. And he rose from his chair, and, having buckled on his word that had lain on the table by him and taken his cap in his hand, stood looking down on the king with a malicious smile on his face. And he said with a look that had more mockery than respect in it:

"THE DEVIL SPURS AND I GALLOP!"

"Have I your Majesty's leave to withdraw? For ere day dawn, I have matters to transact in Streisau, and I would be at my castle of Zenda to-night."

Then King Rudolph took a sheet of paper and wrote an order that the castle and all that was in it and all the demesne should be surrenderd to Count Nikolas of Festenburg on his demand, and he gave the paper to Nikolas. Then he rose up and held out his hand, which Nikolas kissed, smiling covertly, and the king said with grace and ignity:

"Cousin, my castle has found a more worthy master. God give you joy of it." And he motioned with his hand to be left alone. Then when the count had gone he sat down in his chair again and remained til it was full day, neither moving nor yet sleeping. And there he was found by his gentlemen when they came to dress him, but none asked him what had passed.

Count Nikolas, now lord of Zenda, did not so waste time, and the matters that he had spoken of did not keep him long in Streisau; but in the early morning he rode out, the paper which the king had written in his belt. First he rode with all speed to his own house of Festenburg, and then he gathered together all his followers, servants, foresters, and armed retainers, and he told them that they were to ride with him to Zenda, for that Zenda was now his and not the king's. At this they were greatly astonished, but they ate the fine dinner and drank the wine which he provided, and in the evening they rode down the hill very merry, and trotted, nearly a hundred strong, through the town, making a great noise; so that they disturbed the Bishop of Modenstein, who was lying that night at the inn, in the course of a journey from his see to the capital; but nobody could tell the bishop why they rode to Zenda, and presently the bishop, wearied with traveling, went to his bed.

CHAPTER II.

Now King Rudolph, in his great chagrin and dismay, had himself forgotten or at least neglected to warn the count of Festenburg that his sister, Princess Osra was residing at the castle of Zenda; for it was her favorite resort and she often retired from the court and spent many days there alone. There she was now with two of her ladies, a small retinue of servants, and no more than half a dozen guards; and when Count Nikolas came to the gate, it being then after nine, she had gone to her chamber and sat before the mirror, dressed in a loose white gown and with her ruddy hair unbound and floating over her shoulders; and she was reading an old story-book, containing tales of Helen of Troy, of Cleopatra, of Berenice and other lovely ladies, very elegantly related and embellished with fine pictures. And the princess, being very much absorbed in the stories, did not hear or notice the arrival of the count's company, but continued to read while Nikolas roused the watchmen, and the bridge was let down and the steward summoned. Then Nikolas took the steward aside and showed him the king's order, bearing the king's seal; and the steward, although both greatly astonished and greatly grieved, could not deny the letter or the seal, but declared himself ready to obey and to surrender the castle; and the sergeant in command of the guard said the same; but, they added, since the princess was in the castle, they must learn her mind of the matter and take her commands.

"Aye, do," said Nikolas, sitting down in the great hall. "Tell her not to be disturbed, but to give me the honor of being her host for as long as she will; and say that I will wait upon her, if it be her pleasure." And he smiled to think of the anger and scorn with which Osra would receive the tidings when the steward delivered them to her.

In this respect the event did not fall short of his expectations; for she was so indignant and aghast that, thinking of nothing but the tidings, she flung away the book and cried, "Send the count here to me," and stood waiting for him there in her chamber, in her white gown and with her hair unbound and flowing down over her shoulders. And when he came she cried, "What is this, my lord?" and listened to his story with parted lips and flashing eyes, and thus read the king's letter and saw the king's seal. And her eyes filled with tears, but she lashed them away with her hand. Then the count said, bowing to her as mockingly as he had bowed to her brother:

"It is the fortune of the dice, madame."

"Yes, my lord, as you play the game," said she.

His eyes were fixed upon her, and it seemed to him that she was more beautiful in her white gown and with her hair unbound over her shoulders than he had ever felt her to be before; and he eyed her closely. Suddenly she looked at him; and for a moment he averted his eyes; but he looked again, and her eyes met his. For several moments she stood rigid and motionless. Then she said: "My lord, the king has lost the castle of Zenda, which is the home and cradle of our house. It was scarcely the king's alone to lose. Have I no title in it?"

"It was the king's, madame, and now it is mine," smiled Nikolas.

"Well, then, it is yours," said she; and, taking a step towards him, she said, "Have you a mind to venture it again, my lord?"

"I would venture it only against a great stake," said he, smiling still, while his eyes were fixed on her face, and marked every change in the color of her cheeks.

"I can play at dice as well as the king," she cried. "Are we not all gamblers, we Elphbergs?" And she laughed bitterly.

"But what would your stake be?" he asked sneeringly.

Princess Osra's face was now very pale, but her voice did not tremble and she did not flinch; for the honor of her house and of the throne was as sacred to her as her salvation, and more than her happiness.

"A stake, my lord," said she, "that many gentlemen have thought above any castle in preciousness."

His voice quivered a little, as a man's does

"Of what do you speak?" he asked, and in excitement. "For, pardon me, madame, but what have you of such value?"

"I have what the poorest girl has, and it is of the value that it has pleased God to make it and pleases men to think it," said Osra. "And all of it I will stake against the king's castle of Zenda and its demesne."

Three Colonial Boys.

A story of the times of '76. By Everett T. Tomlinson, author of "The Search for Andrew Field," The Boy Soldiers of 1812," etc. 368 pp. Illustrated. Cloth $1.50. W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston.

We have issued this book as an aid in the solution of that difficult problem, "What shall our young people read?" It deals with one of the most interesting periods of American history, and embraces many incidents and regions which heretofore have been kept in the background. It is a story of three boys who were drawn into the events of the times; is patriotic, exciting, clean and healthful, and instructs without appearing to. The heroes are manly boys and no objectionable language or character is introduced. The lessons of courage and patriotism especially will be appreciated in this day.

It is a volume of especial and peculier merit. It embodies exceptional merit as a historical story, dealing with the events preceding and during the early days of the American Revolution, and combines this so perfectly with the exciting adventures of three boy friends that the history is absorbed unconsciously, but is remembered all the more readily for that very reason. The number of really good stories for young people on the Revolutionary period of American history is suprisingly small. The customs of our forefathers' time are admirably portrayed, and strong lessons of patriotism are taught in "Three Colonial Boys," and for this reason it is a book that should be in every library. Another volume is to follow, giving the adventures that befell the three young friends as soldiers in the Continental Army. The title of this book is to be "Three Young Continentals." This is a book that wide-awake librarians will be greatly pleased with.

No Ice to Cut.

The drummer had just arrived and was making himself as comfortable as he could under the circumstances. When one has been traveling through the Southwest with a line of hardware samples for ten or twelve years, putting up at Eagle hotels and American houses sheol isn't so bad if one gets used to it. By all accounts there was likely to be time enough to get used to it.

"Well, how's trade?" demanded the drummer, after he had given Satan a cigar.

The old boy bit off the pointed end, scratched the other end along his flank to get a light, took a long whiff, made rings and replied:

"Oh, so-so. Can't complain. Some better than last year. Times are pickin' up, and folks ain't so religious when business is good."

"Salvation Army interfere much?"

"Nah. They cut no ice with me."—Judge.

Tracing the Loss.

The $2 bill was missing; that was one sure thing. Mr. Hankinson had given it to Mrs. Hankinson to pay the iceman, and Mrs. Hankinson had laid it on the mantel. Now it was gone. Two plumbers had been in through the room early in the afternoon. Later the men from the storage warehouse had called for the Hankinson silverware, ere the Hankinsons departed for the country.

These, besides the usual members of the family, were all who had been in the room.

"Perhaps," Mrs. Hankinson mildly observed, "as the window was open, it was blown out."

Mr. Hankinson snorted.

"Most likely it was blown in," he said.

Then the cook came forward.

"Thim plumbers tuk ut!" she said. "They were here first. The storage min couldn't hev tuk it, fer they wor here last, and I saw it after they wor gone!"

Mr. Hankinson thought profoundly for a moment, and, as this seemed a plausible theory, he let it go at that.—Puck.

Taking Care of the Teeth.

"Even absolutely clean teeth will decay," said a dentist, "but constant care in this respect greatly prolongs the life of a tooth. The general health usually has a great deal to do with it. People used to think that it was a useless expenditure to have children's teeth filled before the arrival of the second set, but more of them are being educated to the fact that the longer the first set is preserved the better the quality of the second set will be. Every child, as soon as he is able to handle a brush, should have one and be taught to use it regularly."—Chicago Times-Herald.

VOORHEES SIX; KEAN TWO.

THE YOUNG SENATOR'S FRIENDS SURPRISE MANY OLD POLITICIANS.

The Elizabeth Magnate Only Carries the Fourth Ward Where There Was No Contest—Big Surprise in the Third.

For weeks the G. O. P. statesmen have considered that John Kean had a cinch on two of the wards in this city and would capture the delegates to the Republican State convention therefrom. These two wards were the Third and the Fourth. Foster Voorhees, many considered, was a nice, popular fellow, but when it came to a contest between himself and the big Elizabeth magnate at the primaries he would not be in it. But Foster was strictly in it last night.

Two days ago the young Senator made a visit to Plainfield and quietly made the rounds among the men who do the hustling around the polls. The result is that where it was expected Voorhees would carry one or two wards, he carried three out of the four wards. In the Fourth ward the Kean men held such sway that they carried the ward—the only one they were successful in—without a contest.

The result of the voting in the Third ward was about the biggest surprise of the affair. It is here that the strongest and most influential friends of Kean reside and up to the time the result was announced they were cocksure of victory. The details of the primaries follow:

Ex-judge W. R. Codington called the First ward primary to order promptly at eight o'clock in the Republican Association rooms. All the seats were filled, while the back and sides of the room were crowded with voters. Joseph B. Coward nominated ex-Judge Codington as chairman and put the motion, which was unanimously carried. Mr. Coward was nominated as secretary, but declined, and named Richard Coriell, who was elected.

Secretary Coriell then read the call. Wm. Addis next moved that the chair appoint two tellers, which motion was carried, and Chairman Codington appointed George W. Moore and Samuel P. T. Wilbur. Nominations for delegates were then called for by the chairman, and J. B. Coward nominated Amos Andrews, James MacMurray named Wm. G. E. See, J. F. Mac Donald named Elias H. Bird, Benjamin LaVere nominated John H. Tier, Sr., and Amos Andrews nominated J. B. Coward. Nominations were then closed by motion, and the chairman read the resolution passed by the city executive committee regarding the manner in which the voting should take place. It required that each voter, as he deposited his ballot, should give his name and residence to the secretary to be recorded, but on motion of J. B. Coward the registering of the names was dispensed with and the balloting began. Printed ballots were handed around by the supporters of both Kean and Voorhees, and used in voting. After the ballots had all been cast they were counted aloud by the tellers, and then Secretary Coriell announced that See and Bird, the Voorhees delegates, had won. One hundred and thirty-two ballots were cast in all, which were divided as follows: See, 96; Bird, 94; Andrews, 38; Coward, 36; J. H. Tier, Jr., 2; J. H. Tier, Sr., 1.

Loud applause followed the announcement, after which the motion of Mr. Andrews, that Bird and See be elected by a unanimous vote, was carried. James MacMurray made a motion to the effect that the delegates should have power to fill any vacancies which might occur in their ranks. The meeting then adjourned.

At the Republican primary meeting last evening in the Second ward, held in the Bryant school building, a large number were present, and the delegates who were elected were both supporters of Voorhees.

George D. Patton called the meeting to order at eight o'clock, and Stephen A. Ginna was elected chairman, and Armstrong Mulford secretary. John Doane and Dr. E. W. Hedges were next selected as judges. Mr. Ginna then read the object of this meeting and said that nominations were now in order for delegates. George D. Patton, Charles B. Corwin, L. L. Croom, John Dumont, and Marion Ackerman, all Voorhees men, were named, but Mr. Dumont and Mr. Ackerman declined to serve. After the judges had counted the votes it was found that 64 had been cast in all. Mr. Corwin receiving 64, Mr. Patton 34, and Mr. Croom 20. V. W. Nash made the motion that the delegates have the power to fill any vacancies, if the delegates were unable to go.

Chairman Ginna asked if there was any other business to come before the meeting and as none appeared, the motion was made and carried to adjourn.

The Third ward Republican primary was called to order by Roger F. Murray at the Casino last evening. Ernest R. Ackerman was duly elected chairman for the evening and James C. Pope secretary.

After taking the chair Mr. Ackerman called for the nomination of two judges and one inspector of election. Eugene M. Laing and ex-Councilman Francis E. Marsh were appointed judges and Harry C. Runyon was elected inspector.

Secretary Pope then read the call for the primary, after which the Chairman called for the nomination of delegates to the State convention. The following were then made:

Charles J. Fisk and Roger F. Murray, representing the Kean faction, and William Thompson and B. Frank Coriell, representing the Voorhees section.

Some little time was lost in preparing paper for the ballots but in time they were furnished to all voters present, who quickly prepared them for their choice.

As the count progressed the excitement grew until at the close of the count everybody was ready and anxious to hear the report which was given by Chairman Ackerman.

The report was as follows:

Fisk and Murray 50 each, while Thompson and Coriell carried the election by 79 and 80 votes respectively.

This report having been given, the applause rang forth in loud cheers for the winning candidates.

A motion was made to the effect that the Chairman and other officers appoint alternates to take the place of the delegates if in any way they should be prevented from attending the convention. This motion was carried unanimously. The meeting then adjourned.

W. A. Westphal called the Fourth ward primary to order precisely at eight o'clock. Mr. Westphal was the chosen chairman, but declined in favor of William Newcorn. Geo. W. DeMeza was elected secretary, while L. DeCamp and A. Angleman, were selected as inspectors of balloting with Geo. M. Newton as judge. Nominations were then declared open by Chairman Newcorn, and Henry Gracely and James Stewart, both Kean men, were named. The nominations were then closed and another motion made and carried that the secretary cast a ballot for Gracely and Stewart as delegates to the State convention at Trenton.

It took just five minutes for the Fourth ward Republicans to select their delegates, the fastest time for many years.

Released Only to Be Arrested Again.

George T. Lyons, of Cranford, was arrested yesterday morning on a charge of assault and battery on his brother, and was committed to the Union county jail. Judge McCormick yesterday afternoon released him on his own recognizance. Lyons had hardly obtained his liberty, however, when he was seized by a New York detective, who had a requisition for his body on a charge of grand larceny. He was taken on a train a prisoner to New York.

ORCHETTA HELD FOR MURDER

CORONER'S JURY FASTENS THE CRIME OF THE TRAGEDY.

Evidence Pointed to the Italian Boarding House Keeper as the Principal—Several Italians Held as Accomplices.

The coroner's jury in the case of the Italian, known as "Jack No. 29," who was murdered between Westfield and Cranford on Wednesday last, heard the testimony of the witnesses of the tragedy Monday afternoon, and by their verdict charge Nicoli Orchetta with the murder.

The inquest was held at Westfield, Coroner Horning presided, and Prosecutor Marsh conducted the examination of the witnesses in behalf of the State.

The Italians who have been under arrest as accomplices or witnesses of the killing were examined, and the stories they told gave the details of the tragedy substantially as they were printed the day following the killing.

The evidence pointed to Orchetta as the principal, and one witness, an Italian known as 34, testified positively to seeing Orchetta strike the fatal blow with the knife, which was subsequently found and identified as the property of the accused Italian.

The jury gave a verdict finding that the Italian died of a stab wound received from the hand of Orchetta.

Orchetta has been formally committed by Coroner Horning, and his associates are also held as witnesses and may possibly be indicted as accomplices in the crime.

There are now three men in the county jail awaiting trial for murder.—Elizabeth Journal.

THE FATHER SETTLED.

Two Boys in City Court for Breaking Windows With Stones.

In City Court this morning William Drake and David McGernon came before Judge Coddington charged with throwing stones, and breaking windows in the house of Mr. Nelson, on South avenue. Both of the boys owned up that they had been in Mr. Nelson's orchard getting apples, but did not know that they had broken any windows. They admitted, however, that they might have done so in trying to knock down apples. The father of young McGernon appeared and agreed to pay for the broken windows. Nelson was satisfied with that so the Judge suspended sentence on the lads.

A WEEK'S CRUISE.

Four Young Men to Start for a Week of Sailing.

To those that love the water nothing can be more enjoyable than a cruise on a small yacht, and that is the way that four young men of Plainfield intend to spend a week's vacation. The party consists of Louis Mohring, of Linden avenue, E. L. Chargois, of West Front street, T. S. Howard, of Liberty street, and M. Rogers, of Linden avenue. They will start from Perth Amboy on September 28th in the sloop yacht, "Mamie Meade," hired for the occasion. They will spend their week in cruising all through that region, while duck shooting and fishing will add to the pleasure.

—Rudolph Weigler and family, of Johnston avenue, moved yesterday to 416 East Fourth street.

A. M. Bailey, a well-known citizen of Eugene, Oregon, says his wife has for years been troubled with chronic diarrhoea and used many remedies with little relief until she tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and diarrhoea Remedy, which has cured her sound and well. Give it a trial and you will be surprised at the prompt relief it affords. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

A number of the young men of the eastern end of Plainfield, who have formed themselves into an organization called the Norwood Athletic Club, met last evening to elect officers and transact other business.

The officers were chosen as follows: President, Wyatt Barnes; Vice-president, Harry Fulper; Secretary and Treasurer, Clarence Thorn; Captain, Walter Thorn.

The name of the society was changed to the Norwood Athletic Association, and the following, besides the officers, enrolled as charter members of the new organization: Harry Dencklau, Percy McVoy, Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., Albert Wyckoff, Wm. VanDeventer and A. Marsh.

Thursday was settled upon as the night for the regular weekly meeting, and Tuesday night the time when visitors should be allowed.

The entertainment followed the business and began with a three round boxing match for points between Harry Fulper and Wm. Thorn. Thorn was given the decision, after which a mock trial followed. Clarence Thorn was judge, Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., lawyer for the plaintiff, while Wyatt Barnes argued the case for the defendant. Percy McVoy was the prisoner, and was charged with stealing some lead pipe. After a most exciting trial the judge decided that the prisoner's witnesses had prevaricated enough to free him and therefore discharged the alleged culprit as not guilty.

The members then talked over the work for the coming winter and made plans for what they should do.

TO SEE WHAT IT WILL COST.

The Borough Council Act on the Watchung Avenue Extension Matter.

An adjourned meeting of the Borough Council was held last night, with Mayor Hegeman presiding. The only important business transacted was the passage of a resolution empowering the street committee to proceed among the property owners whose land in along the proposed line of the Watchung avenue extension, and get an approximate estimate of what amount of money will be needed to purchase right of ways in order that the street may be put through. The list of those who will be effected by the extension was published exclusively in The Daily Press of yesterday.

The Year for Farmers.

This is essentially the farmers' year at the great Inter-State Fair. The Eastern Farmers' Carnival advertised by the association is no idle boast. In the cattle and horse shows, in the display of farm and orchard products, in the mammoth exhibition of agricultural and farming machinery and in the thousand and one things that go to make up a successful country fair, the management have given special attention to the farmer. This is his fair. Ideas will be on tap at every turn. If he wants to keep up with the procession, he can't afford to remain away this year. Remember, Trenton, Sept. 30th to Oct. 4th.

More Stone Walks.

H. C. N. Johnston has the contract for laying a stone walk in front of the various properties along Richmond street. When completed there will be a substantial walk between Watchung and Putnam avenues.

NOT A CACKLE WAS HEARD.

BUT THE CHICKEN THIEF WAS SEEN AND CAUGHT.

Tried to Climb a Picket Fence and Got Stuck—Chickens Bear Silent Witness Against Him.—Held for the Grand Jury.

The proverbial chicken thief is colored, but, in the case that came up before Justice Nash this morning, the thief was a white man. His name was William Henry Ritter, and he was charged by Officer Hartpence with stealing chickens belonging to Mrs. J. D. Brown, of South Second street, near Grant avenue.

Last evening Frank Burke and his brother James, sons of Mrs. Brown, saw someone near the chicken coop, and started out to investigate. They found the ground surrounding the coop littered with feathers, and saw an truder, who dropped two dead fowls and started on a run. Both of the young men went after him and James Burke found him caught on a picket fence which he had tried to climb. The brothers then kindly escorted him to Grant avenue station, and there Officer Hartpence gave him a night's lodging.

This morning the two murdered victims were brought to court to bear silent witness against their murderer. Ritter pleaded non vult, saying he was drunk at the time and had no idea what he was doing. He persisted in denying any knowledge of being near the coop, so Justice Nash held him in $100 bail to await the action of the grand jury.

A DUNELLEN GROOM.

A Pretty Home Wedding Celebrated Yesterday Afternoon—The Guests.

The marriage of Miss Ruth Fenner to Harry Swackhamer, one of Dunellen's popular young men, took place at the home of the bride at Pluckamin at 5 o'clock last evening. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Parry, pastor of the Presbyterian church of that place.

The bride looked charming in her traveling gown of seal brown, trimmed with gold braid. After the wedding breakfast they departed mid showers of rice and old shoes on the midnight train for Joliet, Ill., to be gone two weeks visiting relatives of the groom. On their return they will reside in Dunellen.

Among those who attended the wedding from Dunellen were Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Swackhamer, father and mother of the groom. Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Van Middlesworth, Miss Mabel Van Middlesworth, Charles Van Middlesworth, Miss Minnie Zeisz, Mr. and Mrs. Rugg, Mr. and Mrs. Voorhees, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Force; from Westfield were, Mr. and Mrs. Lindsley Wooley and daughter Helen, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Foster, of Jersey City, Mr. and Mrs. George Clickner, John Bailey, of Manasquan, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Vansickle, of Blackwell's Mills, Miss Ella Fenner and Mrs. George Wortman, of Weston, Mr. and Mrs. John Fenner, of Pluckamin, Mr. and Mrs. Will Fenner, of New York, Misses Hattie and Allie Fenner, Mrs. Rebecca Fenner, grandmother of the bride, Miss Nellie Clickner and Miss Lillie Clickner, of Manasquan, Rev. and Mrs. A. OVER ONE HUNDRED YEARS OLD.

An Old and Valuable Collection of Letters Now in Westfield.

One of the most valuable collections of old letters in the State is now in the possession of Mrs. Clotworthy, of Westfield, who is quite well known in this city. She has letters dated as far back as 1792, when stamps and postmarks were not thought of, the cost of sending the letter being written on the letter in ink. There were no envelopes used in those times, but the sheet was folded over and sealed with wax. One letter bore as its cost of sending the rather strange amount of 18¾ cents. The collection almost fills an entire trunk and is very interesting in showing the progress of the American postal department.

Murphy Obtains Judgments.

Two cases came up before Justice Newcorn yesterday and in both Lawyer C. L. Murphy obtained judgment for the plaintiff. They were Eddy vs. Jones, on contract, and Eddy vs. Smith, on contract. Summons was issued in the case of the Sherman Outfitting Company vs. Witteman, in tort, returnable on the 25th.

SYNOPSIS OF THE GAME LAWS

MATTERS OF IMPORTANCE TO THOSE OF SPORTING INCLINATIONS.

Rules Laid Down by the State Solons With Reference to the Liberties Which Hunters May Take—Items Them Over.

A handy little pamphlet has been compiled which contains the fish and game laws of the State of New Jersey up to May 1st, 1895. It contains 113 pages and is full of information valuable to the hunter and fisherman.

Part one gives the law as to gunning and trapping game other than fish, throughout the State. The first section declares it to be unlawful for any person at any time either on his own property or that of others, to pursue with intent to kill, or in any manner to take or injure any "hare or rabbit, quail, ruffed grouse, European pheasant, European grouse, European partridge, wild deer, buck, doe or fawn, gray snipe, duck, brant, goose, dove, swan, gray, black or fox squirrel, woodcock, reed bird, rail bird, marsh hen, grass or upland plover, or other game bird or game animal, excepting in the manner usually known as hunting with gun, or with dog and gun, the gun being such as may be held at arm's length and fired from the shoulder, without other rest, under a penalty of $50."

Wild deer, buck, doe or fawn, may be taken between October 25th and November 5th, inclusive, in each and every year. The penalty for violation of this regulation is $100 for each and every such animal so unlawfully taken or had in possession.

The State is divided into two game sections. The northern section includes the counties of Sussex, Warren, Hunterdon, Morris, Passaic, Bergen, Hudson, Essex, Union, Middlesex and Mercer.

The southern section comprises all the other counties of the State.

In the northern section hare, rabbit, quail (partridge), ruffed grouse (partridge or pheasant), gray, black or fox squirrel, European pheasant, European partridge, European grouse or woodcock may be taken in the manner prescribed by law between October 25th and December 10th, inclusive.

In the southern section the open season for the above enumerated game birds and animals is from November 15th to January 1st inclusive.

The open season for gray snipe (English or Wilson snipe) is during March and April, and August 31st to December 15th, inclusive.

Reed bird, rail bird, or marsh hen, August 25th to December 15th, inclusive.

The open season for grass or upland plover, or dove, November 1st to December 15th, inclusive.

It is unlawful, under a penalty of $20, to kill, capture or injure, or have in possession, any night hawk, whippoorwill, thrush, meadow lark, finch, martin, barn swallow, woodpecker, robin, oriole, red or cardinal bird, cedar bird, tanager or other insectivorous bird, but this is not to be construed to prevent the taking or killing of English sparrows, cranes, hawks, crows, ravens, crow blackbirds, kingfishers or red-winged blackbirds.

It is also unlawful, under a penalty of $20, to rob or destroy the eggs or nests of any wild bird whatsoever.

In hunting geese, duck or brant or other web-footed wild fowl the hunter must place his boat or sink-box or other floating vessel in which he lies in wait at a distance of no more than one hundred feet from ice or marsh or meadow, bar or bank, or loose seaweed not covered with water at high tide, the said boat or other vessel to be attached to said marsh or meadow by a line. And it shall be unlawful to hunt such water fowl except between one hour before sunrise and one hour after sunset, under a penalty of $25. The boat so used to be propelled only by oars or paddles.

The open season for geese, duck, brant or other web-footed wild fowl shall be from September 30th to May 1st, inclusive; penalty $20.

It is unlawful, under a penalty of $20, to snare, trap, snood net, or device of any description whatsoever, any of the game birds or animals protected by the game and fish law.

It is also unlawful, under a penalty of $20 for each offense, to hunt with a gun, or dog and gun, or carry a gun in the fields on Sunday.

The open season for black bass and Oswego bass is from May 30th to December 1st, inclusive; penalty $20.

The open season for brook trout is from April 1st to July 15th, inclusive; penalty $20.

No explosive or medicated bait are to be used in any of the waters of the State for the purpose of taking or killing fish, under a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $500.

The closed season for pickerel is from February 20th to May 1st, inclusive. They may be caught at any other time in a lawful way with rod and line.

Justices of the peace, district courts and police magistrates shall have jurisdiction to try and punish any person or persons accused of violating any of the provisions of the act. Any police officer, fish and game warden or fish and game protector, or any officer or detective of any incorporated game protective society may arrest without warrants offenders against the provisions of the game and fish law, and proceedings may be instituted on any day of the week, Sunday to be no bar to the successful prosecution of the same.

Captain McGee.

There was a meeting of the boys of Leal's School yesterday afternoon to organize a football eleven. The only business transacted was the organization of the team and the election of Raymond A. McGee as captain.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L. Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

ATLANTA'S GREAT DAY

Formal Opening of the Cotton States Exposition.

President Cleveland or Some Member of His Family Will Press the Button at Gray Gables and Start the Machinery — Many Visitors Present—Opening Ceremonies.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 18.—To-day is a great day for Atlanta. The city is gaily bedecked with flags and bunting and the streets are thronged with strangers and residents. At noon most all business will be suspended for the balance of the day and the throng will head for the exposition grounds to be present at the opening of the greatest achievement ever undertaken by the new south.

All the Buildings Opened.

For two years the work of preparation has gone on unceasingly and most of the thousands of exhibits are in place and ready for inspection. All the buildings will be opened this afternoon, although a few of them are still uncompleted and may not be entirely finished before October 1. The government building is fully completed and all the exhibits are in place. The woman's building needs only a few days more to be placed in satisfactory condition. Fine arts building and machinery hall are entirely finished and crowded with exhibits.

Machinery Hall Crowded.

More space than could be given in machinery hall was applied for and has resulted in some crowding. The fair as a whole, while of course on a smaller scale than the World's Columbian exposition at Chicago, presents an almost equally pleasing appearance owing to the topography of the grounds which are naturally attractive and have been most tastefully laid out. The lagoon is particularly beautiful.

Opening Ceremonies.

All in-coming trains this morning are crowded with visitors and although the crowds are very large the accommodations are ample. A great influx of notables is looked for on Sunday and Monday with the arrivals from Chattanooga of the governors of the various states and their staffs, who are now attending the celebration there. The ceremonies of the formal opening are elaborate. The buildings along the route of the parade are elaborately decorated. At the park considerable speech making will be the order of the day, at the conclusion of which the great wheels will begin to turn in response to the electric touch to be given at Gray Gables and the exposition will be declared formally open by President Charles F. Collier. The electric lights have been tested and found to be satisfactory. The effect was beautiful and impressive.

TO START THE MACHINERY.

Some Member of the President's Family Will Press the Button.

Buzzards Bay, Mass., Sept. 18.—The work of running a wire to Gray Gables was completed last night and everything is in readiness for starting the Atlanta exposition this afternoon. Superintendent of Branch Offices Viles arrived last night from Boston, inspected the work and found everything satisfactory. The Western Union people have taken every precaution that nothing shall occur to mar the success of the undertaking. The line is a special one, entirely free, orders having been given for operators not to cut in, which would tend to delay the opening ceremonies. Up to 10 o'clock this morning the president had not been informed as to the exact hour he would be called upon to press the button, but understood that about 2 o'clock will be the hour selected. It is quite generally understood that the president will press the button, but it is reported here this morning that some other member of the family may perform the act, possibly Miss Marion Cleveland.

The presentation will take place in October when Mr. Jefferson opens his season in this city. Money for the cup will be raised by popular subscription from among the theatrical profession.

New York: crops generally matured; hops picked; corn mostly cut; grapes being shipped; drought continues; wells and streams lower than in years. New Jersey: crop condition in southern sections much improved by rain; drought continues in remaining sections seriously affecting late root crops, cabbage and pastures. Pennsylvania: some late corn, buckwheat and tobacco were injured; frost on 15th. Maryland: Short crops of corn, tobacco, buckwheat and tomatoes being harvested; peach season about over; apples and pears abundant.

MANY MASSACRES.

Conditions Bordering on Anarchy in the Congo Free State.

London, Sept. 18.—Private letters which have been received here from the Congo Free state say that affairs there are in a condition verging upon anarchy. Encounters between Belgian forces and natives, which have been represented in official dispatches as resulting in Belgian victories, are said to have been in fact serious reverses. It is reported that two Englishmen traveling in the Free state have been murdered and eaten by natives. A Belgian expedition, under Lieut. Franquir, was attacked by natives on February 11. The soldiers hastily formed themselves into a hollow square, upon which the natives rushed with such overwhelming force that the Belgians were put to rout in ten minutes. Soon after it became known, according to the correspondence, that a native chief named Ndpruma had massacred Capt. Hansens and the whole of his escort, numbering sixty persons.

MOTOR-PROPELLED VEHICLES.

Something About the Bicycles Used in France.

Washington, Sept. 18.—United States Consul Chancellor at Havre, France, in answer to numerous inquiries from this country has made a report on motor-propelled vehicles. Bicycles and tricycles he says are propelled by a small petroleum motor. The weight of the entire machine is considerably under 100 pounds, and the price is $250. The rider after starting his motor propels the machine with his feet until the motor is working, after which he drops the treadles. On mounting a hill the rider can assist the speed by gearing the peddles again. Before this system can be profitably applied in the United States it will be necessary to bring our roads to the condition of European highways. In France all carriages pay an annual tax of from $9.50 to $13.80, according to their seating capacity. Bicycles pay $1.93, and no vehicle is allowed to go on the road until the tax is paid.

HAVE TO PAY DOUBLE PRICE.

Hotel Guests Overcharged for Admission to Watkins Glen.

Watkins, N. Y., Sept. 18.—Judge Parker of the supreme court has vacated the temporary injunction granted by Judge Smith two weeks ago, to restrain the management of Watkins Glen from charging guests of the Glen Park hotel, a rival house, twenty-five cents more admission fee than the rest of the public is required to pay. Guests of the Glen Park had been compelled to pay double the regular price, and now it seems that the management of the glen is at liberty to put a prohibitory fee upon them, if it sees fit.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 18.—Col. C. L. McArthur of Troy, publisher of the Troy Budget, met with a painful accident yesterday afternoon. At about 5 o'clock he started down a flight of stairs leading from the United States hotel office to the barroom when he slipped and fell to the bottom, sustaining numerous bruises about the head and shoulders. The injuries, however, are not serious. This morning he was resting comfortably. It was at first thought his skull was fractured.

IT LACKED EXCITEMENT

Republican Convention at Saratoga Very Quiet.

Everything Predicted by Platt Was Accomplished—Excise Plank Is Omitted and a Vaguely Worded Sunday Observance Resolution Adopted—The Ticket.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 18.—The republican state convention completed its work in less than eight hours, renominating the state ticket of 1893 and adding Celora E. Martin of Binghamton for associate justice of the court of appeals in place of Judge Francis M. Finch, who will shortly be retired by reaching the age limit. The prearranged programme was carried out with remarkable celerity and smoothness. Everything that T. C. Platt predicted would be done last Saturday was done, and except for a few breezy moments the proceedings were lacking in excitement.

Same Old Ticket.

The ticket named is as follows: For judge of the court of appeals, Celora E. Martin of Broome; for secretary of state, John Palmer of Albany; for comptroller, James A. Roberts of Erie; for treasurer, A. B. Colvin of Warren; for attorney general, Theodore E. Hancock of Onondaga; for state engineer, Campbell W. Adams of Oneida. Two ballots were necessary before Judge Martin was named. Jesse Johnson of Brooklyn and Pardon G. Williams of Watertown gave Mr. Platt's candidate quite a close fight for the nomination. When Broome county won the delegates lost all ambition to break the slate and the old state ticket of '93 was nominated by acclamation on a single ballot.

Excise Plank Omitted.

The platform with the excise plank omitted was adopted and an amendment in favor of the maintenance of the Sunday laws offered by Warner Miller was tacked on. Strong efforts were made for liberal resolutions on excise and home rule but they were defeated, and the convention went to the other extreme and placed the party on record as favoring the enforcement of Sunday laws in the interest of labor and morality. The wording of the resolution is somewhat vague, and it may mean a great deal or very little, according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. Congressman Sherman of Utica was temporary chairman and Senator Clarence Lexow, of investigating fame, was permanent chairman. The latter made the speech of his life upon assuming the gavel, and sounded the keynote of the campaign—reform in city and state affairs.

Morton Endorsed for President.

Chauncey M. Depew, fresh from his trip abroad, killed half an hour's time while the delegates were waiting for committee reports by a speech delivered offhand and in his best vein. The convention endorsed the administration of Gov. Levi P. Morton, and expressed the hope that the next national republican convention will place him in nomination for president. J. Sloat Fassett, the doughty young warrior of Chemung, was made a hero of by the delegates, and he also helped kill time by a speech in which one may find sarcastic flings at Platt between the lines.

Anti-Platt Men Turned Down.

All the contesting anti-Platt delegations were turned down by the committee on contested seats. The attendance at the convention was not overwhelmingly large but a good showing was made when it is remembered that there were practically no booms in town. Chauncey M. Depew and Platt and nearly all the lesser lights of the party left for their homes last evening and by midnight Saratoga was nearly deserted.

GLEN M'KINNEY SAFE.

He Was Not Lost and Returns to His Hunting Camp.

Steamboat Springs, Col., Sept. 18.—News reached here late last night of the finding of Glen Ford McKinney, son of a banker at Titusville, Pa., and his safe return to the hunting camp. On the day of his disappearance young McKinney had wounded an elk, which he followed to dark. He was forced to camp out that night and the following day he met some other hunters with whom he remained until he could get a conveyance to his own camp.

ANTI-SEMITE VICTORY.

Small Taxpayers Carry the Municipal Elections in Austria.

Vienna, Sept. 18.—The municipal elections to replace the council which the government dissolved for incapacity, resulted in the first electoral college, consisting of the smaller taxpayers, electing forty-six councilmen, all of whom are anti-semites. The vote shows that 30,710 anti-semite and 7,348 liberal ballots were cast. The other colleges vote on Sept. 23 and Sept. 27.

Scribner, Neb., Sept. 18.—The village of Dodge, 14 miles west of here, was almost wiped out by fire yesterday afternoon. Every business house in the place with the exception of three, about a dozen residences and the two hotels were destroyed. Engines from this place did good service in saving residence property.

NAPOLEON,

ONCE ASKED FOR AN OPINION,

Gives a Graphic Description of His Ideal Woman. Mothers Please Note.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

In response to a question asked by a lady, the great Napoleon replied, —

"My ideal woman is not the beautiful-featured society belle, whose physician tries in vain to keep her in repair, nor the fragile butterfly of fashion, who gilds the tortures of disease with a forced smile.

"No! my ideal is a woman who has accepted her being as a sacred trust, and who obeys the laws of nature for the preservation of her body and soul.

"Do you know, my knee involuntarily bends in homage when I meet the matron who reaches middle age in complete preservation.

"That woman is rendered beautiful by perfect health, and the stalwart children by her side are her reward. That's my ideal woman."

To grow to ideal womanhood the girlhood should be carefully guarded.

Mothers owe a duty to their daughters that in too many cases is neglected.

Nature has provided a time for purification; and if the channels are obstructed the entire system is poisoned, and misery comes.

At a mothers' meeting the wife of a noted New York divine said to her listeners: "Watch carefully your daughters' physical development.

"Mothers should see that Nature is assisted, if necessary, to perform its office, and keep their daughters well informed as to matters concerning themselves."

Irregularities, from whatever cause, are sure indications of organic trouble. With irregularities come disturbance of the stomach and kidneys.

Violent headaches often attack the victim; pains shoot everywhere. Extreme irritability follows quickly, and then utter despondency overwhelms the already over-burdened life. Unless the obstruction is removed at once, your daughter's whole future will be darkened. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will accomplish the work speedily. It is the most effective remedy for irregular or suspended action known.

WARN'NG TO RIOTERS

Edict Issued by the Emperor of China.

He Calls for Protection for All Foreigners and Insists on the Most Severe Punishment for Those Who Took Part in Recent Massacres. Officials Told To Act.

San Francisco, Sept. 18.—The steamer Rio Janeiro brings the following from the United Press correspondent at Tokio, Japan: The emperor of China has issued the following edict with reference to the recent anti-Christian outbreaks in that empire:

Extremely Indignant.

"Since the opening of international commerce with western countries foreigners have always resided in the inland districts at peace and harmony with their native neighbors and we in our imperial love for both native and foreigner alike have time and again commanded our high provincial authorities to pay extra heed constantly to protect the latter from harm. Judge of our extreme indignation then upon hearing recently of riots, destruction of chapels and murder, the evil characters in their ruthless ferocity going so far as to murder even women and children. A number of rioters have already been arrested and will undergo trial, but the chiefs and heads of the murders are still at large and we command the Tartar generals to set to work without delay at the head of the military and district officials and speedily arrest these wicked characters, nor shall any be allowed to escape the meshes of the law.

Officials Warned.

"It is the manifest duty of the local mandarians throughout the empire to be always on the alert and prevent such worthless characters from manufacturing scurrilous tales and exciting the populace: they should crush all incipient risings at the slightest sign. What act of frivolity and indifference to duty is this then that has brought about all these recent serious outrages? We would also command the various Tartar generals, viceroys and governors to impress upon all their subordinates the necessity of granting protection to all in the chapels in the city streets. They are also to issue proclamations exhorting the people to abstain from listening to scurrilous tales which excite unfounded suspicions in the breasts of all. If there be any who shall dare to raise disturbances in the future they shall be at once punished with the utmost severity of the law, and as to such of the local officials as may use subterfuge and craft to avoid their duties they are to be most severely punished and no leniency shall be exercised in their cases. Let these commands be made known to all within this empire."

England's Conduct Censured.

Little value is attached by foreigners to this edict. It is now well understood that the orders of the emperor of China have virtually no force outside the walls of Pekin. It is generally believed that the action of the British government has fallen far short of the requirements of the occasion. Instead of dispatching a consul to investigate the circumstances connected with the Kucheng atrocities the task should have been entrusted to a secretary of the legation, and instead of a Chinese escort the commissioner should have been accompanied by 500 red coats and blue jackets. If the brutal massacre of English women, girls and children may be condoned by the payment of a few dollars and the execution of a dozen men who probably had no hand in the crime, but have sold their lives to expiate it, the Union Jack will soon cease to be a genuine protection to British subjects. That is what Englishmen are saying everywhere in the far east, and it cannot be denied that there is much truth in the complaint.

EXECUTIONS AT KUCHENG.

Seven of the Recent Riotors Put to Death.

London, Sept. 18.—The Times to-day prints a dispatch from Shanghai saying that seven of the prisoners convicted of complicity in the recent massacre were executed at Kucheng yesterday in the presence of the foreign consuls. The British gunboat Linnet had arrived.

NO LAW AGAINST IT.

Pugilism in Texas Seems To Have the Upper Hand.

New York, Sept. 18.—A special from Dallas, Tex., says: Chief Justice Hart of the court of criminal apeals, the court of last resort, last evening decided that Texas has no law prohibiting pugilistic exhibitions, and dicharged Clark, Cavanagh and Bates, who were on trial.

ENTIRE CREW LOST.

Norwegian Bark Clodian Wrecked Off Umea, Sweden.

Stockholm, Sept. 18.—The Norwegian bark Clodian, Capt. A. Johansen, has been totally wrecked off Umea, Sweden, and her entire crew has been lost. The Clodian was a vessel of 490 tons and was built in Dundee in 1863. She was owned by O. A. Johansen of Fredrikstad.

GOLD FOR THE TREASURY.

The Peoples' Bank of Pittsburg Ships $100,000.

Pittsburg, Sept. 18.—The Peoples' bank has shipped $100,000 in gold to the national treasury at Washington.

Sing Sing Convict Drowned.

Sing Sing, N. Y., Sept. 18.—John Dolson, a convict serving a term for burglary and sentenced from Newburg, N. Y., while employed at the prison dock yesterday was attacked with an apoplectic fit. He fell in the river and was drowned.

Ransom Appointed Arbitrator.

Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 18.—A special from Mexico city says: Minister Ransom has been appointed arbitrator in the Mexican-Guatamalan contention. President Diaz announced the appointment yesterday.

Minister Ransom at Mexico.

FOR NEW BATTLESHIPS.

Two Vessels To Be Built Under Contract To Insure Good Work.

Washington, Sept. 18.—Advertisements will be given out to-day for two battleships. Bids will be received Nov. 30. The time for the completion of the work is limited to three years. In the advertisement contractors will be requested to bid for the ships both with and without armor, the secretary not having made up his mind as to the value of the suggestion made by Chief Constructor Hichburn and combatted by Capt. Sampson, chief of the ordnance bureau. Constructor Hichburn, in a report to the secretary some days ago, contended that it would be conducive both to economy and better work to have the vessels built under contract and turned over under full armor. Capt. Sampson holds to a contrary view, but inasmuch as his report has just been given to the secretary, its contents have not been made public.

WORK OF INCENDIARIES.

No Doubt That Rockefeller's Barns Were Set on Fire.

Tarrytown, N. Y., Sept. 18.—The fire insurance underwriters and the local authorities who have been making an investigation as to the cause of the fire on the property of J. D. Rockefeller have decided that the firing of the barn and outbuildings was of incendiary origin. The investigation proves that the fire started in a small hay loft in the rear of the barn, beneath which, not over three feet, was stored enough dynamite and giant powder to destroy all the buildings in the vicinity. It was almost a miracle that these explosives were not reached by the flames. The hay was undoubtedly saturated with kerosene oil. Farmers living in the vicinity have found empty oil cans in the woods. The investigators also find that the person or persons who started the fire were acquainted with the place.

FOR STEALING A SIGN.

A Harvard Student Fined and a Warning Given.

Boston, Sept. 18.—Judge Almy of the district court, Cambridge, yesterday fined M. A. Stearns, a Harvard college freshman, fifteen dollars for stealing a sign in this city. Judge Almy told th young man that if the college term had commenced he would be inclined to give him a more severe sentence. The next student that comes before the court on the charge of stealing signs will, the judge said, receive a house of correction sentence, and young Stearns would have received this sentence if his imprisonment would teach a lesson to others, but their absence from the city just at present made this impracticable. Stearns belongs in Springfield, Mass.

BRYER ARRESTED IN CHICAGO.

He Eloped from Manchester, N. H., with Mrs. Livingstone.

Chicago, Sept. 18.—Alexander Bryer and Mrs. Mamie Livingstone, who eloped from Manchester, N. H., a month ago, have been living here since September 5, and Bryer is under arrest. He is accused of stealing the rig which they hired at Kean & Boyles livery stable the night of the elopement. Bryer says that he did not sell the rig but that they drove in it to Nashua where it wes left in a livery stable. Mrs. Livingstone, whose maiden name was Burded, was married only a few months and excuses her elopement by saying her husband was cruel to her. Both will return to Manchester. They intend to marry after Mrs. Livingstone gets a divorce.

SAYS HE IS TOO OLD.

The Reported Resignation of Minister Broadhead Confirmed.

St. Louis, Sept. 18.—Charles S. Broadhead, son of Colonel James O. Broadhead, United States minister to Switzerland, who has returned from a visit to that country, confirms the story of his father's resignation. Professor Garland C. Broadhead has received a letter from his brother, the minister, in which he writes: "I have just sent my resignation to the president to take effect November 1. I have already engaged passage on the Germanic to leave Liverpool November 6 for home. I have been here over two years and that is as long as I can remain away from home. I am too old. This is the reason and the only reason for my resignation."

COINING DOUBLE EAGLES.

Millions of Dollars Worth of Bars Rolled Into Sheets To Be Stamped.

Philadelphia, Sept. 18.—The work of coining double eagles has begun at the mint. Several million dollars worth of gold bars have been rolled into sheets for the coin presses. These have been running on eagles and half eagles recently, and $1,000,000 worth of these coins were shipped to the New York subtreasury yesterday. There are now $40,000,000 worth of gold in the mint ready for coinage.

GOLD RESERVE.

This Morning It Stood at a Little Over Ninety-five Millions.

Washington, Sept. 18.—The treasury gold reserve at the opening of business today with all withdrawals and deposits accounted for is $95,682,528. The withdrawal of $250,000 in gold for export was reported from New York late yesterday afternoon. The same telegram reported a gold deposit from Rochester, N. Y. banks of $350,000.

Will Be Vigorously Prosecuted.

ONE MIGHTY EFFORT

Spain's Fall Campaign Plans in Cuba.

It Will Be War to Extermination or Surrender—The Entire Island To Be Surrounded by Two Lines of War Vessels. The Rebels Denounced as Brigands.

Havana, Sept. 18.—Madrid cablegrams dated September 10 are being published in this city. They give the official views of Senor Canovas del Castillo of Madrid, acting for the government of Spain concerning the rebellion in this island. His manifesto is a carefully prepared document bearing internal evidence of the closest thinking as well as an intimate knowledge of the whole situation. It clearly is the government programme under which Gen. Martinez Campos will initiate his cool weather campaign. Coming from the highest authority in Spain, its directness means much to all concerned. That part of Cuba—the eastern end of the island—will be freed from all rebels and their adherents. It will be war to extermination or surrender to all Cuban rebels, macheteros and the like.

Root and Branch.

The military organizations, as outlined in the dispatches, will be full and complete. It will be root and branch work this time; no foci will be allowed to remain to create future disturbances. Hereafter Cuba will be for Spain. Spain will enter on the fall campaign with only one object in view—the immediate and absolute subjugation of the island. The portion of the rebels will be death or deportation. Amid the many and very necessary precautionary measures, one will have an instant and appreciable effect on the rebels who need arms, ammunition and supplies. Early in November when the war vessels are reinforced by the new gunboats the whole island will be surrounded by two lines of war vessels. One line will cruise in an inner circle and one in an outer circle, practically a huge blocking fleet of some sixty moderd warships. It is believed that this arrangement will absolutely preclude the landing of men or supplies. It will isolate the rebels from any and all outside aid and sympathizers. The government of Spain realizes the extent of this islands littoral, nearly 2,000 miles, and the many facilities that it offers to the rebels and their allies for landing stores and men.

Denounced as Brigands.

Senor Canovas del Castilla denounces the men in the field as "a band of bandits, to whom and for that reason belligerent rights will not be accorded." In his official telegram he defines belligerents as "armed bodies of men, under a recognized flag, who enter on war with a laudable object, and who conduct it according to the usages of civilization. That kind of warfare," he says, "is wholly unknown to the Cuban rebels whose sole object is robbery, murder and incendiarism. Destruction, desolation and ruin is their work and that in spots which, for the moment only, Spain has not yet sent men to protect life and property. No honorable nation," he says, "will accord belligerent rights to a band of incendiaries and assassins." The manifesto simply confirms what had been decided upon in Cuba. It is an ultimatum of ominous portent to the rebels.

LLOYD STEAMSHIP NOT LOST.

Officers of the North German Company Deny the Reported Accident.

Bremen, Sept. 18.—The rumor that one of the steamships of the North German Lloyd Steamship company had foundered is denied by the officers of that company, who declare that no accident of any kind whatever has happened to any ships of the company. The officers are very indignant at the circulation of the report, which has caused the most intense anxiety among persons having friends or relatives traveling on the ships of the company. They are absolutely unable to trace the origin of the rumor.

FOR KILLING A WHITE CAP.

McCrackin Convicted of Murder in the Second Degree.

Huntingdon, Pa., Sept. 18.—The trial of Wesley McCrackin, one of three brothers charged with the killing of George Hawn, a member of a white cap band in May last, ended last night with a verdict of murder in the second degree. This was known as the white cap murder. A number of disguised young men, calling themselves white caps, tore down a division fence of the accused and this resulted in the killing of Hawn.

TRACED TO THE CHURCH.

Damaging Evidence Brought Out Against Durrant.

San Francisco, Sept. 18.—Yesterday was another bad day for Durrant. The prosecution produced two witnesses, one a woman, 60 years old, who lives directly opposite Emanuel church, and the other a police court lawyer, who swore that they saw Durrant and the girl he is accused of murdering enter the church on the fatal afternoon.

The American Plate Glass Works Destroyed by Fire.

Anderson, Ind., Sept. 18.—The American Plate Glass works, the largest plant of the kind in the world, was destroyed by fire last night. It was the only one not in the recent trust. Capital invested in the plant was $1,000,000. Fire engines from neighboring cities assisted in preventing the flames from spreading.

September 24—Circuit court in Union county opens at Elizabeth.

Plainfield's well paved streets have been torn up to allow the laying of sewer pipes, and it will be very difficult to have the streets put in as good condition again. Some day municipalities will reach that point where the necessary sewer will precede the erection of dwellings. As it is now sewerage is generally an after consideration.—New Brunswick Home News.

New Jersey's canning industry has its busy season now. Our State is second only to Maryland in its canning interests, the pack of tomatoes alone being nearly a million cases annually. In 1894 most of the farm crops in the State were much below the average yield by reason of a late, wet spring, followed by a prolonged drought. This year the yield is large for nearly all the crops, and as tin is cheaper than it was a year ago, the product of our canning factories ought to be considerably above that of any former year, and at the same time be of better quality. Canned fruit and vegetables have become an important item of winter consumption, especially with people of moderate means, and it is gratifying to know that they are to be not only of good quality, but cheaper in price.—Camden Democrat.

Without claiming too much morality for the average State and county fair, it is still proper to say that Waverly and Somerset county have this year demonstrated the fact that it is possible to run fairs substantially free from indecency and gambling. There may have been, there probably was, a little private gambling going on at each place, and some few of the shows were not exactly parlor entertainments. But these are to be expected; they can hardly be avoided. Yet the Waverly fair of this year and the fair at Somerville, which closed Thursday, were respectable and pure as compared with the same fairs at the same places last year. This is encouraging in two respects. It shows conclusively that gambling and indecency are not essential elements of success at fairs. It also shows that public indignation, properly expressed through the newspapers, stirs up the minds of the fair managers, and compels them to take cognizance of the wrongdoings which go on sometimes under their very eyes. There is still one fair to be held in this State which has been as big a gambling concern as any race-track. It remains to be seen whether it will continue in this discreditable role this year—Elizabeth Journal.

Inconsistencies of the News.

News, Sept. 17.

Newspaper and other reports from all over the country are to the effect that a prosperous fall and winter trade has already begun. Traveling salesmen report that their late trips on the road have been very encouraging, and large sales have been made. Merchants throughout the country feel confident that a profitable business will be done, and are laying in large stocks of goods. Merchants who have stood the great strain for the last two years will now reap the reward of their patience and enterprise.

News, Sept. 17.

Is it not rough on the New York Herald and World after taking the trouble to imagine a great boom in business, raising of wages, giving names of firms and places, etc., to have their game spoiled by a wicked Republican paper publishing letters from the very firms referred to by them, repudiating the statements of those free trade papers? That's what happened yesterday.

Mrs. Warman Wins.

The case of Annie E. Warman vs. Charles Anderson, to determine right of property, was tried before Justice Crosley and a six-men jury Monday afternoon. The suit was brought to prove that certain articles levied upon to pay a debt of Mr. Warman's were the property of Mrs. Warman. Receipted bills were presented for most of the articles, and the jury brought in a verdict that the goods were the property of Mrs. Warman. C. L. Murphy represented Mrs. Warman, and W. S. Angleman acted as counsel for Charles Anderson.

Good Prospects for an Eleven.

Those interested in football must not forget the meeting in the Y. M. C. A. building Friday evening to organize the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. Football Association. Already a number of Plainfield's cracks have decided to join, and the team promises to be the best this city has seen for many years. Some of the old veteran players will coach the team and Friday evening a live man will be chosen to manage the eleven.

A Dance on Craig Place.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Callouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

The Century.

One of the most novel yachting experiences the enthusiast can enjoy, "A Cruise on the Norfold Broads," is described by Mrs. Anna Bowman Dodd in the October number of The Century. Here one exchanges views of the sea for glimpses of English meadows; hedge-rows brush against the sails, boats dart out from behind barns, and the waving grain stretches almost to the gunwale. Then there are the sleepy old English villages, with their wealth of romance, on every side. It is like yachting on dry land. Joseph Pennell furnishes characteristic drawing for the article.

The pipes are all ready and the work of locating the line of the sewer trench begun.

—The Academy of Music, New York, has the most remarkable melodrama on its boards that was ever seen in this country. It is not only a tremendous big play in which love, hate, jealously, villainy and honesty are placed in contrasting juxtaposition but it is a production full of life, color, and splendor, upon which an enormous lot of money has been spent, and better than all else it is an extraordinary success. The melodrama has the catchy title, "The Sporting Duchess," and it is given under the direction of Chas. Frohman.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Transatlantic Cattle Ships.

The cattle ships that ply between New York and London are a boon to the impecunious foreigner who desires to reach his native shore and has not the price of a steerage passage in his pocket. Any man of a good constitution can work his way across the ocean on these ships as a cattle helper.

A man who desires to go to England as a cattle helper may go to any one of the numerous shipping agencies on Greenwich or State streets, and by paying $1 as an agent's commission become engaged as a cattle helper.

The agent makes the applicant sign a paper in which he agrees to work his way to England as a cattle man, without compensation or claim for a return ticket.

The ordinary cattle ship is a vessel 300 feet long, with a great proportionate beam, and about 3,000 tons displacement. Cattle ships very rarely log a speed of more than twelve knots an hour. Of the cattle men nothing can be said generally. They are as different from one another as it is possible for men to be.

A big cattle ship answering the description of the one given above sailed from New York for London recently with 580 head of cattle, 60 horses and a cargo of dressed beef. There were on this ship twenty-three men working their way to London as cattle helpers, and among their number were an actor, a pugilist, a blacksmith, a tailor and a doctor.

Gladstone's Sentiments Toward America.

More truly than any other Englishman now living Gladstone embodies and represents the real sentiments of the masses of the English people. If anybody doubts what these sentiments are toward America, let the doubt be resolved by recalling to mind these three facts:

That Mr. Gladstone's own chosen phrase for designating the American people is "own kin beyond the sea;" that in all his long battle for justice to Ireland his favorite argument has been that home rule would assimilate the government of that island to the splendid model furnished by the autonomy of every American State, and that he, the most popular man in England, solemnly and in writing, has pronounced the American Constitution the most nearly perfect piece of governmental work ever struck out at any one epoch of time from the brain of mankind.

The Prayerful Smiths.

They tell a story in Dalton of a recent revival meeting in one of the rural districts of Whitfield County. In the middle of the services the preacher said:

"Will Brother Smith lead in prayer?"

Seven men arose and began praying at once.

This embarrassed the preacher, and he said hurriedly:

"I mean Brother John Smith."

At this announcement one sat down, and five more got up and began praying. The preacher saw his mistake, said nothing, and let the eleven pray it out among themselves.—Atlanta Constitution.

LAST OF GAMBLING IN MONTANA

The Wide-Open Licensed Gaming Places Suppressed by a New Law.

The first day of July marked the beginning of a new epoch in the history of Montana. Upon that day the new law prohibiting gambling went into full force and effect with memorable scenes. Nothing so surprised Eastern visitors to the bustling Montana cities as the sign frequently seen in conspicuous places, "Licensed Gambling." It has been a strange sight to see from a dozen to fifty men gambling in broad daylight, in full view from the principal business streets, with as much indifference to the passing crowds as a New Yorker would manifest while taking his lunch in a restaurant. Any one was at liberty to enter and watch the game, or to come and go as he chose; no questions were asked, no remarks made. The gamblers were apparently unconscious of everything except the tables before them, on which the stakes sometimes ran far into the tens of thousands of dollars in a single game.

All this has been changed by the new law, as gambling in Montana virtually ceased on Sunday night, June 30. During the last week in June many of the gambling houses were closed, or their outfits turned over to others, in anticipation of the new law, as the proprietors were unwilling to take the risk of a run of luck on the part of the professional gamblers during the closing hours. Even the men who took their places concluded that discretion was the better part of valor, and dropped out, one by one, before the final wind-up; so that, at last, they were reduced mostly to "snap games," in which any one having from a few dollars to a few hundreds could take possession of the tables and try their luck against the "plungers."

OPPOSED TO HORSE MEAT.

An Organ of the Provision Trade Tells Why We Should Have No Use for It.

The National Provisioner, having been asked by numerous friends and patrons to squarely define its position on the question of horse meat as a human food, puts itself on record as "being unalterably and unqualifiedly opposed to horse meat as food for human beings, no matter whether it comes from old, broken down, diseased car horses or young fillies." It continues:

"There is no need or cause for any American to eat horse meat. Such a pleasure should be left to the citizens of those countries where legitimate meats and meat products are regarded as luxuries, and are so to a great extent because American meats are shut out.

"As long as three or four States of this great country kill more cattle, hogs and sheep yearly than the whole country can consume, and even, in the adjustment of supply and demand, allow us to do a large export trade, there seems no occasion why we should resort to horse meat.

"If there is a necessity for lower prices, then let us raise more cattle, etc. Should this not be practicable nor profitable, then let us remove the barriers which, in the shape of a protective duty, keep out foreign meats, and let prices find a lower level by competition. We do not see, however, that the per capita cost of meat consumption in America is relatively higher than in other countries, in fact, we think an investigation would show it to be lower, and, therefore, we do not see that a necessity for lower prices exists here when beef sells at a price equal per pound to six per cent. only of the cheapest day laborer's wages, while in Germany and France the purchase of a pound of beef will absorb fifty per cent. to seventy-five per cent. of a day laborer's wages.

He Knows the Ways of Women.

Judge Coffey had just called up the Haskins will contest yesterday when Attorney Grant rose and addressed the court.

"I have a matter that will take but a minute," he explained, "and I'd like to dispose of it."

"I can't take it up now," declared the judge. "I must proceed with the case on trial."

"I have but one witness, and it will require but a minute to dispose of the matter," persisted Grant.

"Where is your witness?" asked the judge.

"She is right here and it will take but a minute," and the attorney beckoned to his client.

"Mr. Grant, you can't deceive this court," declared the judge sternly.

"But—your honor—I—I have no such desire. I——"

"You are trying to deceive the court, sir. A man of your experience must know that no woman can raise her veil and arrange her bangs to be sworn in a minute's time, much less give her testimony. Proceed with the Haskins case."—San Francisco Post.

A Punctured Tire.

Col. Reed Jones went home from the club at a very late hour. He had an early morning engagement to go off for a day's sail on a friend's yacht and wanted to snatch a few hours' sleep. Early in the morning one of his young sons banged on his father's door and called:

"Papa, get up! It's time to go."

"Oh, that's a shame," declared another son.

"What's a shame?"

"Why, to puncture papa's tire that way."—San Francisco Post.

WAS FULTON FIRST?

CAPT. MOREY RAN A STEAM VESSEL 14 YEARS EARLIER IN VERMONT.

Was Sunk, He Thought, by Rivals. Fulton Saw His Model, and, It Is Claimed, Stole the Vermonter's Idea and Became Famous.

Who invented the first steamboat operated in this country? Robert Fulton has earned immortal fame as the inventor, but was he really entitled to it? In 1803 Fulton experimented on the river Seine, in France, with a small steamboat, and in 1807 launched another steam vessel on the Hudson River. The latter trial gave him the credit of what has ever since been accepted to be the first practical operation of a steamboat.

But it is now claimed that Capt. Samuel Morey, of Fairlee, Vt., invented a steamboat which, in 1793, made a trial trip on the Connecticut River. Among those who witnessed this event was the late Rev. Cyrus Mann, at that time a boy.

In an address at the centennial of the town of Oxford, N. H., where Captain Morey was born, he said:

"So far as is known, the first steamboat ever seen on the waters of America was invented by Capt. Samuel Morey, of Oxford, N. H. The astonishing sight of this man ascending the Connecticut River, between that place and Fairlee, in a little boat just large enough to contain himself and the rude machinery connected with the steam boiler and just a handful of wood for a fire, was witnessed by me in my boyhood, and by others who yet survive. This was as early as 1793, or earlier, and before Fulton's name had ever been mentioned in connection with steam navigation.

"There is no reliable evidence from history to show that Fitch was the inventor of steam navigation in this country, from the fact that the progress in that art cannot be traced back to him; but it can be traced to Robert Fulton, and from him directly to Capt. Samuel Morey and nowhere else.

"It is settled beyond all question that Morey had launched his boat on the waters of Vermont before Fulton had accomplished the same thing in New York. It is also a well established fact that Fulton visited Morey at Fairlee for the purpose of witnessing his successful experiment before he himself had launched any kind of a steam craft; and it can be shown that Morey had been engaged in such experiments for years before."

Capt. Morey on his first trip succeeded in making four miles an hour against the current. This first steamboat was a rough craft with crude apparatus. It was propelled by a paddle wheel at the bow and the engine also was located near the bow.

Morey after this first trip visited New York and consulted with Fulton and Livingston in regard to his invention, showing them the model. They thought favorably of his invention, but advised him to place the engine in the middle or side of the boat rather than in the front part, and his paddle wheel in the rear end.

Capt. Morey now made a much larger boat. This also was propelled by steam, and the power was applied to a paddle wheel in the stern. It was also fitted with paddle wheels on the sides, which could be turned by hand power. The boat was called the Aunt Sally, and was painted white and adorned with fantastic red stripes.

In the year 1820, it is alleged, the boat was sunk in Morey Lake, a sheet of water in the vicinity of Fairlee, named after Capt. Morey by jealous enemies who filled it with boulders. Others assert that Morey, fearing that his contemporaries might see the boat and deprive him of his patent by infringement, sank it himself.

It is said to lie in about eighteen feet of water at the south end of the lake, a few rods off shore. The spot is covered with pickerel grass and the muddy bottom is very soft. In all probability it is by this time completely covered. Some attempts have been made to raise it. In 1874 the New Hampshire Antiquarian Society appointed a committee to try and find the boat, but the committee searched in vain.

Up in Vermont it is said that Fulton conceiving the idea of the invention from the model he had seen, despoiled Morey in later years of the fame and name which he should have had. And Morey, his friends said, in his last years was of the same opinion himself and spoke bitterly of Fulton.

The model of the boiler and engine are still in existence, and are in the possession of C. F. Bracey, of Wells River, Vt., and Judge Kibbe, of Fairlee, Vt.

RARE SWISS CATTLE.

Brought to Strengthen the Failing Jersey Breed.

While the cattle fanciers of this country have even gone to far-off India for the Brahmin cattle to use in making certain crosses for our Southwestern States, they have heretofore overlooked one of the finest breeds in the world, called the Simmenthal, from Simmen Valley, in the canton of Berne, Switzerland.

There are now at Garfield, N. J., fourteen head, eight cows and six bulls, of this breed, recently imported by Mr. Theodore Havemeyer for his model farm, "Mountain Side," at Mahwah, N. J. Here, in the heart of the Ramapo Mountains, for nearly twenty years Mr. Havemeyer has kept Jerseys.

It was his idea to raise a herd, bred on scientific ideas and handled in such a way that they would demonstrate to the farming world that pure-bred animals could be used profitably in dairying. When the present manager of the farm, Mr. John Meyer, Mr. Havemeyer's son-in-law, took charge some sixteen years ago, twenty head of Jerseys were imported. Not only were they carefully selected for their blood lines, but the greatest attention was given to their individuality; each animal must be a good producer of milk and butter to make a good return for the food consumed and the care given it. From this beginning there has been built up a herd of over 400 head. The Simmenthal cattle are to be used to cross with the Jerseys.

"I have had constantly brought to my attention," said Mr. Havemeyer, "the fact that owing to persistent inbreeding the stamina and health of the Jerseys were on a yearly decline, and from losses in our herd I found that if I wished to retain my dairy and furnish milk and butter on the lines that we have always used, to make each animal pay for the food consumed and the care given to it, that we must do something.

"The Jersey cow is the ideal butter cow with the exception of the matter of health. She has been pampered and petted until she is so nervous that the slightest thing puts her off her feed, but she will undoubtedly return, under favorable conditions, the largest amount of profit for the expense incurred. When the first suggestion of an out-cross came some four years ago Mr. Mayer spoke at once of the cattle of the Simmen Valley, in Switzerland, which he had seen in tramping over Switzerland. I kept hoping that by a more natural method of stabling I could maintain the Jerseys in good health. When I found this not to be the case, Mr. Mayer went to Europe last summer and made a careful study of these cattle. Through the courtesy of his friend, Col. Jean de Watteville, President of the Simmenthaler Breeders' Association, four hundred head, the pick of the breed, were selected; from this one hundred head were taken, and then the fourteen head that I have now were ultimately chosen.

"It is a wonder to me that so few people know anything about the Simmenthalers. Their butter is sold in Berne and in Paris, bringing about 60 cents a pound. The veal of their calves is the finest in the world. It is nearly all consumed at Berne. The farmers don't kill until they are four months old, when they will weigh about 200 pounds, rough weight, which is quite a difference from the Jerseys, which at that age will hardly come up to 150 pounds. The farmer in Switzerland who owns ten to twenty acres of pasture will keep four or five of these Simmenthaler cows, making from each cow 450 to 500 pounds of butter a year. These cows do all the work of the farmers, hauling out the manure and ploughing. They are very quick walkers and seem to be endowed with unusual intelligence. They are fed in the summer time hay from the celebrated mattens, and in the winter time a little bran, possibly a few oats. These cows will give milk and do all the work on the farm until they average about ten years old, when they are dried off and fattened for beef. The beef will bring five cents more a pound right in Berne than that of any other beef, and when scarce often goes up as high as ten cents more a pound. You can see where the profit will come to the farmer in this. The fat is beautifully distributed throughout the beef. Almost immediately after the birth of the calf the cow is put to work, and the calf is taken off and fed on grass and skimmed milk, and that is all it gets until it is big enough to work."

DUCKS THAT DON'T TAKE TO WATER

They Were Brought Up in Paris and Had Not Learned to Swim.

Hydrophobic ducks may seem a bit strange, but a writer in the Revue Scientifique tells of such.

These were not mad ducks, but merely ducks that hated what people have come to consider their natural element. They were three of them and they had lived some years in Paris, where they had a small basin and their daily bath. Their owner finally took them to the country to live beside a fine lake, thinking it the ideal place for the amphibious. What was his surprise, on putting them into the lake to see them instantly scramble ashore and waddle Indian file to a neighboring stable, whence they never came out save to feed.

Never could they be induced to remain in the water save by force or fear, and when there they always drew close together, so as not to occupy no more space than that of their bath basin at Paris. They were thoroughly afraid of the lake, and they never became used to it.

In Picardy, it seems, young ducks are often kept from the water in order to protect them from water rats, and prevent them from eating things that might injure their flavor when brought upon the table. Ducks thus brought up until their full growth of feathers is acquired refuse to enter the water, and if forced are sometimes drowned.

Count Nikolas' eye flashed and he drew nearer to her; he took his dice box from his pocket, and he held it up before her, and he whispered, in an eager, hoarse voice:

"Name this great stake, madame, what is it?"

"It is myself, my lord," said Princess Osra.

"Yourself?" he cried wondering, though he had half guessed.

"Aye. To be lord of Zenda is much. Is it not more to be husband to the king's sister?"

"It is more," said he, "when the king's sister is the Princess Osra." And he looked at her now with open admiration. But she did not heed his glance, but with face pale as death, she seized a small table and drew it between them, and cried, "Throw, then, my lord! We know the stakes."

"If you win, Zenda is mine. If I win, you are mine."

"Yes, I and Zenda also," said she. "Throw, my lord."

"YES, AND ZENDA ALSO," SHE SAID

"Shall we throw thrice, madame, or once, or how often?"

"Thrice, my lord," she answered, tossing back her hair behind her neck, and holding one hand to her side. "Throw first," she added.

The count rattled his box, and his throw was seven. Osra took the box from him, looked keenly and defiantly in his eyes, and threw.

"Fortune is with you, madame," said he, biting his lips. "For a five and a four make nine, or I err greatly."

He took the box from her; his hand shook, but hers was firm and steady; and again he threw.

"Ah, it is but five," said he impatiently, and a frown settled on his brow.

"It is enough, my lord," said Osra, and pointed to the dice that she had thrown, a three and a one.

The count's eyes gleamed again, and he sprang to her and was about to seize the box. But he checked himself suddenly and bowed, saying:

"Throw first this time, I pray you, madame, if it be not disagreeable to you."

"I do not care which way it is," said Osra, and she shook the box and made her third cast. And when she lifted the box, the face of the dice showed seven. And a smile broadened on the count's face, for he thought surely he could beat seven, he that had beat eleven, and thereby won the castle of Zenda, which now he staked against the Princess Osra. But his eyes also were very keenly and attentively on her, and he held the box poised, shoulder-high, in his right hand.

But then a sudden faintness and sickness seized upon the princess, and the composure that had hitherto upheld her failed; she could not meet his glance nor could she bear to see the fall of the dice; but she turned away her head before he threw and stood thus with averted face. And he kept attentive eyes on her and drew very near to the table so that he stood right over it. And the Princess Osra caught sight of her own face in the mirror and started to see herself, pallid and ghastly, and her face was drawn as though she were suffering some great pain. But she uttered no sound.

The dice rattled in the box; they rattled on the table; there was a pause while a man might quickly count a dozen; and then Count Nikolas of Festenburg cried out in a voice that trembled and tripped over the words:

"Eight, eight, eight."

But before the last of the words had left his shaking lips the Princess Osra faced round on him like lightning. She raised her hands so that the loose white gown fell back from her rounded arm, and her eyes flashed and her lips curled as she outstretched her arm at him and cried:

"Foul play."

For, as she watched her own pale face in the mirror—the mirror that Count Nikolas had not heeded—she had seen him throw, she had seen him stand for an instant over the dice he had thrown with gloomy and maddened face; and then she had seen a slight, swift movement of his left hand, as his fingers deftly darted down and touched one of the dice and turned it.

And all this she had seen before he had cried eight! Therfore now she turned on him, and cried, "Foul play," and before he could speak she darted by him towards the door. But he sprang forward and caught her by the arm above the wrist and gripped her, and his fingers cut into the tender flesh of her arm, as he gasped, "You lie! Where are you going?"

But her voice rang out clear and loud in answer:

"I am going to tell all the world that Zenda is ours again, and I am going to publish in every city in the kingdom that Count Nikolas of Festenburg is a common cheat and rogue and should be whipped at the cart's tail through the streets of Strelsau. For I saw you in the mirror, my lord, I saw you in the mirror." And she ended with a wild laugh that echoed through the room.

Still he gripped her arm and she did not flinch; for an instant he looked full in her eyes; and covetousness and desire and shame came altogether upon him and overmastered him, and he hissed between set teeth:

"You shan't! By God you shan't!"

"Ay, but I will, my lord," said Osra. "It is a fine tale for the king and for your friends in Strelsau."

An instant longer he held her where she was; and he gasped and licked his lips. Then he suddenly dragged her with him towards a couch, seizing up a coverlet that lay on a couch he flung it round her, he folded it tight about her, and he drew it close over her face. She could not cry out or move. And he lifted her up and swung her over his shoulder, and, opening the door of the room, dashed down the stairs towards the great hall.

In the great hall were the six of the king's guard, and some of the servants of the castle, and many of the people who had come with Count Nikolas; they all sprang to their feet when they saw him. But he took no heed of them but rushed at a run through the hall, and out under the portcullis and across the bridge, which had not been raised since he entered. And there at the end of the bridge a lackey held his horse; and he leapt on his horse, setting one hand on the saddle and still holding Osra; and then he cried aloud:

"My men, follow me! To Festenburg!"

CHAPTER III.

And all his men ran out, the king's guard doing nothing to hinder them, and jumped on their horses, and setting them at a gallop hurried after the count. He, riding furiously, turned towards the town of Zenda, and the whole company swept down the hill, and reaching the town, clattered and dashed through it at full gallop, neither drawing rein nor turning to right nor left, and again they roused the bishop of Modenstein, and he turned in his bed, wondering what the rush of mounted men meant. But they, galloping still, mounted the opposite hill and came to the castle of Festenburg with their horses spent and foundered. In they all crowded, close on one another's heels; and the bridge was drawn up, and there in the entrance they stood looking at one another, asking mutely what their master had done, and who was the lady whom he carried wrapt in the coverlet. But he ran on till he reached the stairs, and h climbed them, and entering a room in the gate-tower, looking over the moat, he laid the Princess Osra on a couch, and, standing over her, he smote one hand upon the other, and he swore loudly:

"Now, as God lives, Zenda I will have, and her I will have; and it shall be her husband whom she must, if she will, proclaim a cheat in Strelsau."

Then he bent down and lifted the coverlet from her face. But she did not stir nor speak, nor open her eyes. For she had fallen into a swoon as they rode, and did not know what had befallen her, nor where she had been brought, nor that she was now in the Castle of Festenburg and in the power of a desperate man. Thus she lay still and white, while Count Nikolas stood over her and bit his nails in rage. And it was then just on midnight.

On being disturbed for the third time the Bishop of Modenstein, whose temper was hot and cost him continual prayers and penances from the mastery it tient; and since he was at once angry and half asleep, it was long before he would or could understand the strange and monstrous news with which his frightened host came trembling and quaking to his bedside in the dead of night. A servant-girl, stammered the frightened fellow, had run down half-dressed and panting from the castle of Zenda, and declared that, whether they choose to believe her or not—and indeed she could hardly believe such a thing herself, although she had seen with her own eyes from her own window—yet Count Nikolas of Festenburg had come to the castle that evening, had spoken with Princess Osra, and now (they might call her a liar if they chose) had carried off the princess with him on his horse to Festenburg, alive or dead, none knew; and the men-servants were amazed and terrified, and the soldiers were at their wits' end, talking big and threatening to bring ten thousand men from Strelsau and not leave one stone upon another at Festenburg, and what not. But all the while and for all their big talk nothing was done; and the Princess was at Festenburg, alive or dead or in what strait none knew. And finally, nobody but one poor servant-girl had had the wit to run down and rouse the town.

"NOW, AS GOD LIVES, ZENDA I WILL HAVE!"

The Bishop of Modenstein sat up in his bed and he fairly roared at the innkeeper:

"Are there no men then in the town who can fight, fool?"

"None, none, my lord—not against the count. Count Nikolas is a terrible man. Please God he has not killed the Princess by now."

"Saddle my horse," said the bishop, "and be quick about it." And he leapt out of bed with sparkling eyes. For the bishop was a young man, but a little turned of thirty, and he was a noble of the old house of Hentzau. Now some of the Hentzaus (of whom history tells of many) have been good and some have been bad; and the good fear God while the bad do not; but neither the good nor the bad fear anything in the world besides. Hence, for good or ill, they do great deeds and risk their lives as another man risks a penny. So the bishop, leaving his bed, dressed himself in breeches and boots, and set a black cap with a violet feather on his head, and staying to put on nothing else but his shirt and his cloak over it, in ten minutes was on his horse at the door of the inn. For a moment he looked at the straggling crowd that had gathered there, then with a toss of his head and a curl of his lip he told them what he thought of them, saying openly that he thanked Heaven they were not of his diocese; and in an instant he was galloping through the streets of the town towards the castle of Festenburg, with his sword by his side and a brace of pistols in the holsters of the saddle. Thus he left the gossippers and vaporers behind, and rode alone as he was up the hill, his blood leaping and his heart beating quick; for as he went he said to himself:

"It is not often a churchman has a chance like this."

On the stroke of half past twelve he came to the bridge of the castle moat; and the bridge was up. But the bishop shouted, and the watchman came out and stood in the gate-way across the moat, and, the night being fine and clear, he presented an excellent aim.

"My pistol is straight at your head," cried the bishop. "Let down the bridge. I am Frederick of Hentzau—that is, I am the bishop of Modenstein—and I charge you, if you are a dutiful son of the church, to obey me. The pistol is full at your head."

"MY PISTOL IS STRAIGHT AT YOUR HEAD."

The watchman knew the bishop; but he also knew the count his master.

"I dare not let down the bridge without an order from my lord," he faltered.

"Then before you can turn around you're a dead man," said the bishop.

"Will you hold me harmless with my lord if I let it down?"

"Aye, he shall not hurt you. But if you do not immediately let it down, I'll shoot you first and refuse you Christian burial afterwards. Come, down with it."

So the watchman, fearing that, if he refused, the bishop would spare neither body nor soul, but would destroy the one and damn the other, let down the bridge, and the bishop, leaping from his horse, ran across with his drawn sword in one hand and a pistol in the other. Walking into the hall, he found a great company of Count Nikolas' men, drinking with one another but talking uneasily and seeming alarmed. And the bishop raised the hand that held his sword above his head in the attiude of benediction, saying, "Peace be with you!"

Now most of them knew him by his face and all knew him as soon as a comrade whispered his name; and they sprang to their feet, uncovering their heads and bowing. And he said:

"Where is your master, the count?"

"The count is upstairs, my lord," they answerd. "You cannot see him now."

"Nay, but I will see him," said the bishop.

"We are ordered to let no one pass," said they, and although their manner was full of respect they spread themselves across the hall and thus barred the way to the staircase that rose in a corner of the hall. But the bishop faced them in great anger, crying:

"Do you think I do not know what has been done? Are you all then parties in this treachery? Do you all want to swing from the turrets of the castle when the king comes with a thousand men from Strelsau?"

At this they looked at him and at one another with great uneasiness; for they knew that the king had no mercy when he was roused and that he loved his sister above everybody in the world. And the bishop stepped up close to their rank. Then one of them drew his sword half-way from its scabbard. But the bishop, perceiving this, cried:

"And do you all do violence to a lady, and dare to lay hands on the king's sister? Aye, and here is a fellow that would strike a bishop of God's church!" And he caught the fellow a buffet with the flat of his sword that knocked him down. "Let me pass, you rogues," said the bishop. "Do you think you can stop a Hentzau?"

"Let us go and tell the count that my lord the bishop is here," cried the house steward, thinking that he had found a way out of the difficulty, for they dared neither to touch the bishop nor yet to let him through; and then steward turned to run towards the staircase. But the bishop sprang after him, quick as an arrow, and dropping the pistol from his left hand, caught him by the shoulder and hurled him back. "I want no announcing," he said. "The church is free to enter everywhere."

And he burst through them at the point of the sword, reckless now what might befall him so that he made his way through. But they did not venture to cut him down; for they knew that nothing but death would stop him, and for their very souls' sakes they dared not kill him. So he, kicking one and pushing another and laying about him with the flat of his sword and with his free hand, and reminding them all the while of their duty to the church and of his sacred character, at last made his way through and stood alone, unhurt, at the foot of the staircase, while they cowered by the walls or looked at him with stupid helplessness and bewilderment. And the bishop swiftly mounted the stairs.

Harrigan Tomorrow Night.

The play of "Old Lavender," which will be presented at Music Hall tomorrow evening has always been considered one of the best of Mr. Harrigan's productions, and his portrayal of an old drunkard, with its humorous and pathetic touches, is doubtless one of his most successful achievements as an actor. Since it was last seen here the piece has been condensed, modified and brightened, and the result of the treatment is altogether satisfactory. Now, as before, the river front scenes are the most life-like and interesting. The supporting company is a very strong one and includes Mrs. Yeamans, John Wild and other old favorites.

No Increase of Salaries for Police.

The Elizabeth police will get no increase in their salaries this year. The City Council Monday night by a vote of 9 to 4 defeated the ordinance on its third reading, although the Mayor, Comptroller and Chief of Police strongly advocated the measure. The ordinance raised the salaries of patrolmen thirteen cents a day, sergeants and detectives twenty-five cents a day and the lieutenant of police $100 a year. The ordinance required ten votes to make it a law. Three Democrats and one Republican voted to kill it.

Liquor Dealers in Session.

The New Jersey Liquor Dealer's Protective Association is holding its annual convention at Turn Hall, in Patterson. Twenty-six branches of the organization took part in the parade before the meeting. President August Koehler presided, and in his address on the work of the last year he deplored the action of the members of the New Jersey Legislature in refusing to assist the liquor dealers in their battles with the uncompromising champions of local option and high license.

HOW TO TEST A THERMOMETER.

Turn It on End, and if the Mercury Still Fills the Tube It's a Good One.

To tell whether a thermometer accurately does its work invert the instrument. If the mercury does not fall to the end, or if it breaks into several small columns, the thermometer contains air and is inaccurate. If perfectly made the slender thread should fill the tube, or should break off at the bulb, and fall to the end of the tube.

There is another interesting fact about thermometers. Nine persons out of ten think the mercurial column round, but that is not the case. The thread of mercury in thermometers is flat. If it were round the column could hardly be seen, for the opening of the tube is as fine as the finest thread. Some eight or ten years ago a Boston manufacturer introduced the scheme of coating the back of the tube with white sizing. That makes the column of mercury stand out plain and distinct.

Thermometers are cheaper and better than ever before. You can now buy a heat-marker for 25 cents, but a first-class instrument will cost you $2. A cheap instrument is like a cheap watch—it is unreliable. The reason for this is that a perfect thermometer has a scale of its own. The cheap thermometer is made on guess work. Hence you see a difference of two, three or five degrees between thermometers in the same locality on the same day.

The most sensitive heat-marker is the radiometer, which was invented by a Mr. Crookes. It consists of four arms suspended on a steel pivot, rotating like a miniature wind-gauge, and the whole affair is inclosed in a glass tube from which the air has been exhausted. The light of a candle one or two feet away causes the arms to rotate. Quite as sensitive is the thermopile, which is used to detect the faint rays of heat transmitted from the moon and the stars to this cold world.

A CUP OF TEA.

It Must Be Boiled in Rainwater in Unglazed Earthenware.

If you want to drink tea properly, it is absolutely necessary to get a tea-pot of Ni-Hing, a variety of baked earthenware that is unglazed on the inside. So all the tea sharps say, and they state it upon the authority of Gen. Icheng Ki-Tong, a celebrated Chinese writer on gastronomic subjects.

There are many other points to be taken into account if tea is to be chosen at its very best. For example, it should be mixed with rain or spring water heated to a certain point. The boiling should only consume a few moments, the water having boiled sufficiently as soon as bubbles appear on the surface.

Green tea, according to this authority, is a tea that the rich Celestials give the highest praise to. In green tea the tiny leaves have hardly come from the bud before they are gathered and dried in the sun. Black tea, on the other hand, is made up of leaves that have reached a state of maturity and have then been dried in front of a fire.

JOINED IN GRACE CHURCH.

DEPEW-PATTERSON NUPTIALS CELEBRATED LAST EVENING.

Church Prettily Decorated With Flowers, and Made Joyous With Wedding Music —Reception Afterwards—The Guests.

A simple, but very pretty wedding took place in the Grace P. E. church last evening when Miss Louise Depew was married to Sturt Hayt Patterson Potted palms filled the chancel and the church was elsewhere decorated with smilax and hydeangeas. At an early hour the guests began to arrive and at 7 o'clock the edifice was filled with relatives and friends.

Rev. Dr. E. M. Rodman officiated and Mrs. W. A. Freeman presided at the organ. A little after the appointed hour the surpliced choir marched down the centre aisle where they met the bridal party and then returned leading the procession and singing the well-known strains from Lohengrin.

The ushers were August W. Kleinecke, John Drayton, Edward K. Hayt, of Paterson, N. Y., Arthur Masters, of Philadelphia, and John Downer, of Newark. Following the ushers was the maid of honor Miss Ewing, of Philadelphia, cousin of the bride, wearing pink organdie with satin ribbons and carrying a bouquet of pink roses. Next came the bride leaning on the arm of her brother, R. Henry Depew. She was attired in a gown of white corded silk, trimmed with honitan lace and orange blossoms, with a tulle veil. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses. The orange blossoms and the lace were the same as worn by the bride's mother at her own wedding. At the chancel the bridal party were met by the groom and the the best man, the groom's brother, Edward James Patterson.

The ceremony was in the usual Episcopal form. After the church service there was a small gathering at the home of the bride's mother, at which only the immediate relatives and friends who came from a distance were present. Among out-of-town relatives were Mrs. Frank Depew and the Messrs. Depew, from Linden; the Misses Ewing, of Philadelphia; Mrs. D. Kleinecke, of Chicago; Edward K. Hayt, of Paterson, N. Y.; Miss Wheeler, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. George Hall, Jr., Mrs. J. K. Caldwell, Mrs. M. Jordan, of Philadelphia.

At an early hour the couple departed amid the best wishes and congratulations of their friends. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson will be at home Mondays after November first, at 346 Franklin place.

THE REPUBLICANS CONVENE.

TEMPORARY ORGANIZATION OF THE G. O. P. CONVENTION.

A Howling Mob There—Result of the Caucus of the Union County Delegation —Several Plainfielders Get Honors.

Trenton, N. J., September 19th.—The Republican Convention to nominate a candidate for Governor met here at noon today. It has been many years since this city has seen such a Republican Convention. The Democratic gathering, as a rule, has always been large, but the Republicans have only on infrequent occasions filled the seats of Taylor's Opera House partially.

Today, however, things are reversed. The opera house, which holds 2 500 persons, is a pushing, howling mob.

It was a wild scene in the opera-house at noon when the big convention was called to order. After a clergyman had asked a blessing upon the deliberations, Congressman Mahlon Pitney, of Morristown, was nominated and elected temporary chairman. The other officers of the convention elected were: Secretaries, John Y. Foster, Essex; J. Herbert Potts, Hudson; Charles R. Bacon, Camden; Thomas K. Beveridge, Passaic; Alexander C. Yard, Mercer; Henry Hueston, Sussex; A. S. Barber, Gloucester, and L. T. Peale, Essex.

The appointment of Committees on Credentials, Rules, Permanent Organization and Resolutions followed the speech of the Temporary Chairman, after which the Convention took a recess until 2 o'clock.

Congressman Gardner, of Atlantic, will place Mr. Kean in nomination and Col. Conger, of Paterson, will perform the same service for Griggs.

The Union county delegation were looked upon by the other delegates with more than ordinary interest, on account of their representing the county from which two of the candidates hail.

In the caucus of the delegation W. H. Corbin, of Elizabeth, was made chairman of the delegation, and J. T. MacMurray, of the First ward in this city, who is alternate in the place of Elias Bird, was elected secretary. Congressman Charles N. Fowler represents Union in the list of vice-presidents. B. A. Vail, of Rahway, is on the committee on resolutions. James W. Ferguson is a member of the committee on credentials from Union. Charles B. Corwin, of the Second ward in this city, is also a member of one of the committees.

In the caucus of the Somerset delegation Newton B. Smalley, of North Plainfield, was made a member of the committee on rules.

DUPED THE HOUSEWIVES.

Sharpers Who Worked Unsuspecting People of Aldene.

Three Aldene ladies were victimized on Saturday last by two men with a prize package racket. The scheme was the old one of putting money in envelopes in a box, which were drawn out at so much a chance. The victims of the sharpers were Mrs. Stryker, Mrs. Penny and another lady whose name could not be learned. The method pursued by the fakirs was extremely bold, and their success was doubtless due mainly to their audacity. Bills of different denominations, consisting of twenties, fifties and hundreds, were apparently placed in the envelopes right under the eyes of the victims. When an envelope was drawn out the sharper would take it, seal it, and leave it with his victim, saying they would call in the afternoon and open it. Each paid $10 for the privilege of drawing, and one of the victims was so thoroughly deceived that she borrowed the money to pay for a chance. The ladies were happy in the thought that they had drawn valuable prizes until the confidence men failed to show up in the afternoon, when a suspicion that all was not right induced them to open the envelopes. Inexplicable as it may seem, they were greatly disgusted when they discovered the envelopes to contain neat, clean pieces of white paper instead of filthy lucre. The sharpers also failed to pay for the carriage which they hired from N. L. Bonnell. They took a boy with them to drive, and late in the afternoon they got out near the racetrack and told the boy to take the rig to the stable, saying they would return shortly to pay for it. This was the last heard of them.—Elizabeth Journal.

The Concert Assured.

Councilman Frost says that the open-air concert will take place Saturday evening despite the sewer trenches.

DEADLY BARB WIRE FENCE.

IT INJURES A HORSE AND CAUSES A LAW SUIT.

Tried Before Justice Sperry and a Twelve Men Jury—Testimony of Horse Authorites—The Plaintiff Won the Case.

The law recently passed by the State Legislature, which allows no barb wire fence to be put up on the division line between the property of two different owners without the consent of both, played a very prominent part in a suit in the borough yesterday afternoon.

The case was that of Wolfe against Stiles, in tort, and was tried in the court room before Justice Sperry and a jury of twelve men. The plaintiff, John P. Wolfe, brought the action to recover damages done to his horse, which on May 15th ran into a barbed wire fence erected by the defendant, Frank Stiles, on the boundary line between the then adjoining properties in Washington Valley.

The law regarding barb wire fences was passed in May, 1894, and in August of the same year, a wire fence was built between the properties of the two men by Stiles without the consent of Wolfe. Wolfe, however, never objected until one day his horse ran into the barb wire fence. The equine was badly injured by the accident, sustaining a deep cut in the breast and fore leg, requiring the care of a veterinary surgeon.

Wolfe testified that he was unable to use the animal for over five weeks after the accident and brought suit to recover $150 damages.

A number of witnesses were called and cross-examined by both sides. Lawyer Harry C. Runyon represented the plaintiff and Lawyer Clarence L. Murphy the defendant. During the progress of the trial some very amusing testimony was given by Adam Fritz and A. S. Huff, dealers in horses.

Hot arguments were made by the counsel on both sides. Lawyer Runyon presented a strong case, and Lawyer Murphy made an excellent fight for his client, with the law and the facts of the case against him.

The case was submitted to the jury which, after an hour's deliberation, brought in a verdict of $7.50 damages for the plaintiff.

GOLF COURSE ALMOST COMPLETED.

The Golf Committee of the Hillside Tennis Club Meets.

When the leaves begin to turn red and the evenings grow cooler then the golf season will begin in Plainfield, at least so the golf committee of the Hillside Tennis Club say. They held a meeting last evening and it was reported that the links would be completed by October 1st, after which time the members of the Hillside Club will have the privileges of one of the finest courses in this part of the country. Already the promise of golf has induced a number of young men to join the club, and within the next ten days a meeting of the club will be called to act upon the applications of others and to listen to the report of the golf committee.

The links, which are located between Central and Plainfield avenues, will be excellent ones when completed and the game promises to furnish an exciting and interesting pastime for both the young men and women of Plainfield.

The course will be the property of the Hillside Tennis Club and the members will have all the privileges of both tennis courts and golf links.

A Scholastic Contest.

A tennis match is being arranged between two cracks from the graduating class in the North Plainfield public school and two of the best players from Leal's school.

Never Came Back.

Miss Tomlinson, of West Sixth street, went to Dunellen on Monday and lost her pocketbook there which contained money and other valuables. It has not yet been found.

Preparing for the Fray.

The Dunellen football team will begin practice on Saturday, and will play their first game a week from that date. Lu Darling, of Netherwood, is coaching the team.

Irving W. Larimore, physical director of Y. M. C. A., Des Moines, Iowa, says he can conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm to athletes, gymnasts, bicyclists, football players and the profession in general for bruises, sprains and dislocations; also for soreness and stiffness of the muscles. When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

SAVED BY A HAIRBREADTH.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE OF A TRAIN LOAD OF CENTRAL PASSENGERS.

An Obstruction Struck by the Philadelphia and Reading Express—One Car Jumps the Tracks—The Details.

Passengers who were on the Philadelphia and Reading Express, which leaves Plainfield at 6:40 p. m., had a thrilling experience last night, and a miraculous escape from an appalling fatality which might have sent a large number of souls into eternity. The train, which is made up of a combination baggage and smoking car, two day coaches and a Pullman sleeper, is a fast one, and while running a mile a minute last evening between Cranford and Roselle, near Aldene, the pilot on the engine struck some obstacle on the track. The pilot was ripped into kindling wood, and the trucks of the combination car thrown off the track. The effect upon the passengers in this car was terrifying and the sudden jolting caused by the engineer bringing the train to a quick halt was equally as startling to the passengers in the other cars. Before the train could be stopped, however, another passenger train, going towards New York on the next track, whizzed by. The only thing that saved this train from running into the swaying, bumping combination car, was the guy chains which were attached to the second coach. It was a hairbreadth escape, and the astonished passengers as they emerged from the cars and were told the trouble, raised their eyes Heavenward and gave thanks that they had escaped as lucky as they did. The railroad ties for a quarter of a mile were gouged to a depth of several inches. After a delay of three-quarters of an hour the passengers were transferred to a local train and continued on their journey.

James T. Powers and P. M. Demarest, of this city, were passengers on the train.

High School Notes.

The industrious students who entered the High School building on Monday last were very agreeably surprised with the changes of both building and school calander. A day or so was spent in becoming acquainted with the new arrangements, but now everything is in running order and the pupils are doing good work.

Among the changes made are the putting of chapel exercises one period ahead, chapel now coming at twenty minutes after 8 instead of 9 o'clock.

Another change which has greatly pleased the members of the classes of '96, '97 and '98 is the moving of their classrooms from the second to the third floor, thus saving the climb upstairs every morning to the chapel.

On Monday morning of each week Mr. Travell will conduct the singing when especial attention will be given to the music in order, if possible, to improve the vocal abilities of the students.

Rev. Mr. Kionka in Connecticut.

The first district conference of the New York Ministerium, which includes New York, Connecticut, and a portion of New Jersey, opened Tuesday in Rockville, Conn. Mr. Kionka is enjoying a splendid time, having renewed his acquaintance with the members of the Plainfield colony in Rockville. He will return today.

Jefferson, R. Stevens, and G. Peterson. William Douglass will be floor manager, while the music will be furnished by Prof. Frazee.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

CRESCENT'S $3,000 IN DEBT.

THE WHEELMEN'S FINANCES ARE IN A BAD WAY.

But Few of the Members Are of the Supporting Kind—More Money Must Be Had—Dues to Be $1 a Month Hereafter.

The Crescent Wheelmen met last evening to listen to the reports of the old officers and to discuss the question of raising the monthly dues.

President C. E. Teel called the meeting to order and about sixty members responded to the roll-call. Then followed the report of James Buckle, ex-treasurer of the club. His report was not particularly encouraging as it told of a debt of $3,000, consisting of notes given for the building of the oval.

The report of John Petrie, the ex-secretary, was read by his successor, Fred Pope, and gave the total membership as being 160, of whom very few were in good standing, there being about $200 still owed in back dues.

Clarence E. Teel next reported as chairman of the racing committee and gave a record of the meets that have been held this year and what other work had been done in the racing line.

An auditing committee was then appointed to examine the books of the club and make a final report of its condition.

The changing of the dues was then discussed at some length. It was shown that the club must have a greater income to keep up the track and the club house, besides providing for all of the privileges which the members now enjoy. Only two members opposed the change and it was decided to make them a dollar a month hereafter instead of fifty cents.

EXEMPTS WELCOME BACK.

President Saltzman Entertained by Old Fire Fighters.

President Auguste Saltzman, of the Exempt Fireman's Association, can't complain that he was not heartily welcomed back by his brother exempts last evening. About sixty of the members gathered at the rooms during the evening to attend the social and smoker given in honor of his return from Europe. Vice-President J. E. Flannery presided. The address of welcome to the returned president was made by Alexander Titsworth, whose interesting remarks were happily replied to by President Saltzman.

Chief Engineer T. O. Doane spoke of the past in a few words, and L. E. Barkalew was entertaining in his old reminiscences of the first fire company in Plainfield.

D. W. Littell made a short speech on the old times. H. N. Spencer added a few words of his experiences. Abner Bartlett, of Alert Hose Company, spoke welcoming words for his company, while Charles J. Newman, foreman of No. 2 Engine, and William T. Newman, foreman of Gazelle Engine, also made a few remarks.

Secretary G. Thorn read an original humorous story which brought down the house. Vice-president J. E. Flannery gave a vocal selection. Among the other speakers of the evening were Frank Marcieles, of Elizabeth, Assistant Chief Engineer James Martin, Edward Nelson, Frank Schuck, J. E. Waters and John Sheppard.

A COMPLETE SURPRISE.

Miss Searing Is Given a Party in Honor of Her Birthday.

It seemed to those that arranged the surprise party for Miss Anna A. Searing, of Madison avenue, that it cleared off yesterday afternoon for their especial benefit, and of course the beautiful evening made the party an entire success. The surprise was complete and the social gathering was very much enjoyed by the surprised and the surprisers.

Most of the evening was spent in playing games and in conversation, after which refreshments were daintily served and the party broke up with everybody sorry that such a pleasant evening had come to a close.

The party was arranged by Miss Searing's friends and was in honor of her birthday. Those who assisted in surprising her were Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Woolley, of Westfield, Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. JOHNSON LEGALLY ACCUSED CORONER'S JURY HOLDS HIM GUILTY OF ANNIE ROGERS' DEATH.

The Son Oliver Could Not Tell a Straight Story, Thus Damaging His Father's Case—Her Satchel Found in His Hut.

The Coroner's jury at Somerville Tuesday rendered a verdict accusing Jacob S. Johnson, the evangelist, of the murder of Annie Rogers, and named Mrs. Kate Elizabeth Johnson, his wife, and Oliver Johnson, his eighteen-year-old son, as accessories

The prisoners were self-possessed, and refused to answer any questions. The son, Oliver, was recalled to the stand in the afternoon, and became muddled. His testimony was unfavorable to his parents.

Calvin Corle, the farmer, from whom Annie Rogers received $16.70, testified that Johnson signed the receipt for the money. Theodore Barcalow, an ex-Internal Revenue detective, and Officer Manning Crow, on searching Johnson's hut, found the satchel in which the money was put by the murdered woman.

Coroner Brady, yesterday, made a thorough search of Johnson's premises. The Johnson hut is a one-story wooden shanty, of two small rooms, two miles from Somerville. These persons lived there: Jacob S. Johnson and his wife Kate, and their three children; Isaac Lewis, his son-in-law, and his wife; Charles Haney and his wife, Rachael, Johnson's niece; Daniel Mead and his wife Rebecca; Johnson's sister and two friends, Mary Davenport and Julia Annin.

A BOARDING HOUSE SNEAK THIEF.

Miss Annie Dougherty Loses the Contents of Her Purse.

He said that he was a machinist employed at Scott's Press Works and that his name was Hanover, when he applied for board at the house of Mrs. Long, of 408 Washington street on Tuesday evening. He was a good-looking fellow, of medium build, light hair, brown eyes, and a dark sandy mustache, and, as he told a plausible story, Mrs. Long rented him a room He soon became acquainted with the other boarders and told them that he had relatives in this city but was afraid to go and see them as he he had no money. Later in the evening he said he was going out to see a chum. He came in early and went up stairs before the rest of the boarders and in the morning did not appear until all the rest were down stairs. After breakfast he went out and they haven't seen him since. At noon yesterday, Miss Annie Dougherty went to her landlady's room to get her pocketbook, left there for safe keeping, and found it empty of all its valuable contents.

No such man as Hanover was known at the Scott Press Works when a Daily Press reporter inquired this morning, and the individual was probably an every day boarding house sneak thief.

DEFENDER DEFEATS VALKYRIE.

Miniature Yacht Races on Hyde's Mill Pond Quite Exciting.

Plainfield had a little yacht race for the America's Cup all of her own yesterday afternoon. Two little yachts, just like their larger brothers, except in size, raced on Hyde's mill pond, and the Defender, a single-masted sloop, the property of Fred Loizeaux, of Putnam avenue, won the race by two minutes, defeating Valkyrie III, a two-masted schooner-rigged craft, the property of George Irwin, of Putnam avenue. The wind was very light but the Lord Dunraven of the contest is hoping for a heavy gale next Saturday afternoon, when the second of the races will take place at three o'clock over the same course.

Miss Etta Raybert, of North avenue, and Miss Helen A. Hazen, of Watchung avenue, both members of the class of '95 in the High School, have returned to take a post graduate course.

A. M. Bailey, a well-known citizen of Eugene, Oregon, says his wife has for years been troubled with chronic diarrhoea and used many remedies with little relief until she tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and diarrhoea Remedy, which has cured her sound and well. Give it a trial and you will be surprised at the prompt relief it affords. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

JERSEY REPUBLICANS

State Convention in Session at Trenton To-Day.

Great Interest Taken in the Outcome of the Struggle—All Uncertainty Up to Last Moment—Voorhees' Strength Seemed To Suddenly Increase This Morning.

Trenton, Sept. 19.—Althought it was long after midnight when many of the republican politicians turned in all were astir bright and early this morning ready for the contest in Taylor opera house. Owing to the uncertainty of the contest the greatest activity prevailed at the hotels last night where republicans from all parts of the state crowded the corridors and leaders' rooms. Uncertainty attending the nominatien continued this morning, and there was no prospect of anything more definite being known concerning it until the balloting made it clear. There was noted this morning, however, a strong under-current in favor of the nomination of Voorhees. It was recognized, it was claimed, that he made possible the great enthusiasm of the republicans the year, and he is liked because he is young, good-natured and brainy as well, and, his friends assert, a hard worker in every cause in which he engages.

Voorhees Admirers Enthusiastic.

It was a sight to see him last night in room 50 at the Trenton house. It was very warm and a great crowd of friends pressed in to shake his hand. Very soon the demonstration assumed the proportions of a reception and it grew so warm and lively in his room that he divested himself of coat and vest and allowed both his hands to be shaken at once while perspiration rolled down his face.

The Other Candidates.

Elias Ward, the Newark candidate for the nomination, received his friends in an adjoining apartment. Kean, Griggs and Toffer also held forth in the Trenton house. The Kean men for the first time, this morning, acknowledged that his strength was problematical and some of them at least were talking of a conference with the Griggs men to get both Kean and Griggs to withdraw from the contest. The adherents of the Passaic candidate laughed the proposition to scorn. "Griggs is going to win," they declared, "and he should stay in the race to the end." They are looking for his nomination on the second ballot believing that Kean's poor showing on the first will bring him many votes.

Nominating Speeches.

Senator Stokes of Cumberland will make the nominating speech for Voorhees. Joseph Engard of Camden will nominate Rodgers, whose headquarters were at the hotel Windsor last night. Col. Cougar of Paterson will present Crisp's name, and John Gibson of New ark will nominate Ward.

Temporary Officers.

The following are the temporary officers: Chairman, congressman Mahlon Pitney of the Fourth district; secretary, John Y. Foster of Essex; assistant secretaries, J. Herbert Potts of Hudson; C. R. Bacon of Camden; Thomas K. Beveridge of Passaic; Alexander C. Ward of Mercer; Henry Huston of Sussex; A. S. Barber of Gloucester, and L. T. Peal of Essex.

THE REPORT ABSURD.

Ambassadors Eustis and Runyon Not To Change Places.

London, Sept. 19.—The correspondent of the United Press in Paris telegraphs that there is no ground for the report which appeared in the Journal of that city that Mr. Eustis, the United States ambassador at Paris, and Mr. Runyon, the United States ambassador at Berlin, were soon to change places. The correspondent called at the United States embassy in Paris to inquire into the matter and was informed that the rumor was utterly without foundation. The report was pronounced absurd and excited laughter among the officials at the embassy.

THE KUCHENG EXECUTIONS.

Ineffectual Attempts To Reach the Leaders.

Shanghai, Sept. 19.—Although the more humble among those concerned in the massacre of missionaries at Kucheng have been punished, the utmost efforts of the British consul have been unavailing to induce the authorities to deal with the viceroy of the province and with other high officials who are alleged to have been responsible for the riots. It is hoped that Great Britain will insist that these offenders shall be brought to justice.

DURRANT'S NERVE FAILS HIM.

He Realizes at Last the Danger of His Position.

San Francisco, Sept. 19.—Durrant's marvelous nerve has forsaken him and for the first time since his arrest he has shown that he realized the danger of his position and feels the horror of the charge against him. It had been shown by four witnesses that he left the school with Blanche Lamont on the afternoon of the murder and by three others that he rode with a young lady of that description out to the church and entered it. From the time he entered the church, about 4:30, it is the theory of the prosecution that he was occupied until 5 o'clock in perpetrating the murder. At 5 o'clock he was seen in the church by another witness, George R. King, the church organist, who occupied the stand all of yesterday. The murderer of Blanche Lamont, after having killed her, locked the door to the belfry, broke the lock and took the knobs off the door and threw them under the belfry door. It was then necessary for him to cross a space above the ceiling to a rear garret of the church from which there was a passage down to the basement. It was down this rear passage that Durrant came when he burst on King's view. He stopped in a space between partly opened folding doors when he saw King sitting at a piano in the corner, and when King asked him what was the matter he did not at once reply. When he did reply it was to explain that he had been fixing a sun burner above the ceiling and that he had been overcome by escaping gas. Durrant's appearance was so startling that King ran to a drug store a block and a half distant, at his suggestion, to get him some bromo seltzer and hastened back with it.

LOST COURT RECORDS.

Over 1,000 Old Police Court Complaints Unearthed in New York.

New York, Sept. 19.—It has been learned that at the same time that over 2,000 indictments were found mislaid among the musty archives of the general sessions court more than 1,000 bills from police courts were also found. These papers, many of them of importance, which should have been submitted to the grand jury in the regular course of business, are of dates ranging from 1863 to 1883. How they could have been mislaid, under the circumstances, is a mystery. The significant point about the discovery of these musty evidences of crime is the legal fact that so much time has elapsed since the papers have been resting in the box in which they were mysteriously packed, that they have all been outlawed. Even a case of manslaughter would have suffered a legal death by this lapse of years. The only charge that would survive—in fact that it is never outlawed—is murder. In the 1,000 complaints there was not one for homicide, it is said.

Atlantic City, N. J., Sept. 19.—The sovereign grand lodge Independent Order of Odd Fellows continued their sittings to-day. A committee was appointed to take action relative to the purchase of property in Baltimore for the use of the sovereign grand treasurer. Sovereign Grand Treasurer Isaac A. Sheppard presented a letter yesterday announcing his resignation. Mr. Sheppard said he was compelled to retire in consequence of failing health. He thanked the order for the uniform courtesy, consideration and kindness which had been extended to him during nineteen years of service in the honorable body. After expressions of sincere regret the resignation was accepted by a standing vote. M. Richards Muckle of Pennsylvania was nominated for the vacancy. He will be installed to-morrow.

At the secret session yesterday afternoon an amendment to the constitution was passed prohibiting the admission in the future to membership in the order of saloon keepers barkeepers and professional gamblers. The closing speech in favor of the amendment was delivered by Past Grand Sire Nicholson of Pennsylvania. The question has been a vexed one for years. The question: "Where shall the next annual session be held?" will be settled this afternoon. Representative Russell of Dallas, Tex., and representatives from Arkansas, Kansas and Canada are working hard for their respective abodes. A resolution asking that the ritual be printed in the Italian language, met with strong opposition. Last night at the United States hotel a grand ball and reception was tendered the members of the sovereign grand lodge, their wives and friends.

SEA-GOING TORPEDO BOATS.

The Herreshoffs Will Probably Get a Contract from Uncle Sam.

Washington, Sept. 19.—The Herreshoffs, the great yacht builders may be given a chance to show what they can do in the way of naval architecture. When bids were opened at the navy department for the construction of the three sea-going torpedo boats authorized by congress the Herreshoffs were found to be the lowest bidders. Their bids, however, were for the construction of the vessels upon their own plans. These plans were referred by Secretary Herbert to Chief Constructor Hichborn and Chief Engineer Melville for consideration and report. After a careful examination these officers found that the boats can be built as proposed by the Herreshoffs and their report to Secretary Herbert will recommend that the contract be given that firm. Some alterations were made in the plans which the Herreshoffs will have to accept if they wish to undertake the contract.

The Beginning of a Vast Cuba Filibustering Plan Nipped.

Washington, Sept. 19.—Dispatches received at the Spanish legation from the Spanish consuls respectively at Key West and Tampa, Fla., announce the seizure of the schooner Lark for engaging in a filibustering expedition. A representative of the Spanish legation sent the information to the department of state, adding that the contemplated expedition of the Lark was but a "small part of a vast plan" on foot to land arms, ammunition and men in Cuba to assist the rebels. Two man named respectively Thomas Callazo and Enrique are mentioned as being leaders in the Lark and kindred expeditions. The United States government through its executive departments is giving the Lark case close attention and will redouble its vigilance along the Florida coast.

THAT BAD PALPITATION.

Short Breath, Dizzy, Faint, Sinking Feeling.

They Mean That You Have Weak Heart and Weak Nerves.

Heart Failure and Sudden Death Sure Unless You Do the Right Thing Now.

Failure or weakness of heart action is very prevalent. It is a most serious and dangerous condition to be in. The first symptoms may be very slight and apparently trivial.

But do not fail to heed them if you value your life. The warnings are plain and unmistakable.

Nervousness and weakness, giddiness, swimming of the head, strange, faint feelings, trembling, short breath, sinking sensation, coldness of feet and legs, fluttering or palpitation in left side of the chest, feeling of apprehension or anxiety as of impending danger, drowsiness daytimes, sleeplessness at night.

A little over exertion, excitement or emotion may bring on the attacks at any time. Sudden rising from a stooping or reclining position will cause dizziness, and rapidly climbing stairs will make the heart palpisate, produce weariness and shortness of breath. In some cases there are pains in the region of the heart, but in more cases there is no pain whatever.

Neglect of these symptoms will result in heart failure, spasms or neuralgia of the heart, or death.

Mrs. C. S. Allen, a widely known lady of 128 Pearl st., Portland, Maine, suffered fearfully from these symptoms. She got cured in the following way:

"For the benefit of suffering humanity," she says, "I wish to testify in regard to the virtues of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. For eight years I had been suffering from palpitation of the heart. I had terrible pains in the limbs, no appetite, and however slowly I went up stairs, I would get all out of breath, and would have to sit down immediately and rest until I recovered my breath.

"My heart beat so fast it seemed as though it would stop. There was hardly any more color in my face and hands than in chalk. The least exertion was an effort. There was hardly anything I could eat or keep on my stomach, it was so terribly weak.

"After paying hundreds of dollars for doctors and medicines without receiving any lasting benefit. I commenced taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

"Before I had taken half a bottle, I saw that it was a wonderful medicine and different from anything I had ever taken. I began to improve immediately, and continued to gain in every respect.

"After taking two bottles, I felt like a new being. My heart was all right, I was not short of breath and the palpitation left me. My food digested well, and I could eat anything. I perfectly and permanently cured. It was marvelous the way that medicine acted.

"Only those suffering as I was, and obtaining relief as I did, can realize my feelings. I can truly say that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy saved my life. I heartily recommend it to everybody."

If you are suffering from weak heart, weak nerves, or any similar complaint, take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will cure you and give you perfect health. These troubles are especially dangerous and must in all cases be cured immediately, or fatal results will follow.

Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

SPAIN NEEDS MONEY

Contracts for a Loan for Cuban War Expenses.

Paris Banks Will Aid Her, in Return for Which They Are To Get a Prominent Part in a Spanish-Cuban Loan When the Rebels Are Put Down.

London, Sept. 19.—The Standard to-day publishes a dispatch from Cuba saying that the funds used in the efforts to suppress the insurrection in Cuba have hitherto been drawn from the Bank of Spain, but that the government has now made arrangements with Parisian bankers to open a credit of £3,000,000 sterling, for six months, renewable for another six months, at 5 per cent. interest. In return for this credit the bankers are to get a prominent part in a Spanish-Cuban loan when the island shall have been pacified.

Rebel Defeat Reported.

Havana, Sept. 19.—The column of Col. Ruiz, operating in the province of Puerto Principe, according to official dispatches received here, has had several brisk skirmishes with the insurgents. In one of these seven rebels were killed and twelve wounded, while of the Spanish troops seven were wounded. An official report states that Capt. Mora, with fifty infantrymen and twenty cavalrymen, engaged an insurgent band numbering 250 men, and after a hard fight forced them to retire. The rebel loss was four men killed and three wounded. One Spanish soldier was killed and five were wounded.

Troops from Morocco.

The steamer Santa Barbara has arrived here with 1,000 soldiers and thirty-seven officers from Teutan, Morocco. The troops were given a warm welcome by the citizens of Havana. The newspaper proprietors of the city distributed among the newcomers 15,000 cigars and 20,000 packages of cigarettes. The enthusiasm of the reception accorded to these troops was indescribable, and is compared with the scenes which attended the departure of the first regiments from New York for the south at the breaking out of the civil war in the United States.

Showered with Flowers.

The regiment was reviewed by General Arderius. As they marched through the streets they were greeted by vast crowds, which included the most fashionable people of the city and were showered with flowers and cheered by the waving of handkerchiefs and fans. They were presented with medals of the Virgin and scapularies, with cigars and cigarettes, while numberless people insisted upon shaking the hands of officers and soldiers and embracing them. General de Campos has arrived at Santiago de Cuba.

Seventeen Arrests in Havana.

Havana, Sept. 19.—Seventeen persons who, it is believed, are accused of potitical offenses, were arrested in this city yesterday.

Ordered Out of Cuba.

Jacksonville, Fla., Sept. 19.—A special from Key West, Fla., says: John A. Sowers, an American and prominent sugar planter for the past thirty years, living in Sagua, La Grande, passed through this city last evening, having been ordered out of Cuba by Martinez Campos. On the 27th of August Mr. Sowers was arrested for no cause whatever, and imprisoned for ten days, after which he was released and given twenty-four hours to leave the country.

GOLD RESERVE.

A Slight Gain Caused by Deposits by National Banks.

Washington, Sept. 19.—The treasury gold reserve stood at the opening of business to-day at $95,706,954, a gain of $340,000 in one day. The gains were made as follows: From the National Bank of America, Chicago, $50,000; from Peoples' National bank of Pittsburg, $100,000; from First National bank of Brooklyn, N. Y., $250,000; small deposits of gold at various sub-treasuries for currency $74,000. A withdrawal for export of $150,000 in gold was announced at New York. The belief that the syndicate is arranging with the national banks of New York for a large gold deposit encourage treasury officials to hope that the gold reserve will not fall much, if any, lower. In some quarters the opinion is entertained that the gold export movement has practically ended.

FORT MACKINAC ABANDONED.

Stars and Stripes Hauled Down After Floating Over 100 Years.

Mackinac Island, Mich., Sept. 19.—The last step in the total abandonment of Fort Mackinac has been carried into effect in the transfer of troops under the command of Lieut. Geery to Fort Brady. The honor of hauling down the stars and stripes, which for more than 100 years have floated over the fort's historic walls, was awarded to Judge La Chance, a veteran of the late war. The fort and park are now under the supervision of the state to which they have been transferred by the United States government.

THE ARMENIAN QUESTION.

Turks Apprehensive About Dispatches to the English Fleet.

London, Sept. 19.—A dispatch to the Chronicle from Constantinople says that the British minister's yacht has been under steam for the last twenty-four hours awaiting dispatches for the fleet. Great apprehension is felt among the Turks.

Buckner Denounces Hardin.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 19.—Ex-Gov. Simon Bolivar Buckner published a card last evening stating that he would support the democratic state ticket with the exception of Hardin and advising democrats not to vote for him. Gen. Buckner denounces Hardin in the strongest terms.

Americans Returning.

London, Sept. 19. — Mrs. Clymer mother-in-law of United States Ambassador Bayard, and Bancroft Davis and Mrs. Davis, sailed from Liverpool on the steamer Teutonic yesterday for New York.

To Command Canada's Troops.

London, Sept. 19.—General Gascoigne sails to-day on the Allan line steamer Parisian for Canada where he is to take command of the troops.

ATLANTA EXPOSITION.

Machinery Started Last Evening and Formal Opening Declared.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 19.—With the suspicious accompaniment of military pomp and civic dignity, leading an immense crowd of people, and honored by the presence of the dignitaries of the church and the representatives of foreign countries, the Cotton States and International exposition was formerly opened to the world last evening. The parade was a brilliant one and was composed entirely of military bodies and brass bands of music, headed by the United States Fifth infantry and the Washington artillery of New Orleans, followed by several regiments of Georgia state troops.

At the Auditorium.

The exercises at the auditorium were imposing and impressive. The auditorium, though crowded, was comparatively cool, and the acoustic properties were almost perfect, so that the speakers could be distinctly heard in all parts of the building. President Collier received a great ovation when he arose to speak, as did Mrs. Joseph Thompson, president of the Woman's board. The speeches were all good, and the oration of judge Emory Speer of the United States court was a profound utterance. The hit of the day was made by Booker T. Washington, the representative of the negro race who in a twenty minutes speech evoked greater applause than all the others put together.

Everything Near Completion.

The exposition is much nearer completion than the public had supposed. The government exhibit is complete, and is pronounced by persons who have seen similar exhibits elsewhere to be the finest ever gotten together by the United States. The agricultural exhibit is practically complete and is an excellent, interesting and attractive display. The exhibits in machinery hall are not all in place, but many are. Fourteen of the seventeen engines began to move when President Cleveland touched the button. The minerals and forestry display is complete. The exhibit of the Georgia manufacturers is somewhat behind. The European exhibits occupying half of the big manufacturers' hall are nearly all in place and by to-night will all be complete.

In the Midway.

The Midway proves to be a fine one. The villagers are genuine people from abroad. Detachments of Arabs and North American Indians have just arrived, completing the list. Now almost every racial type on earth is exhibited on the grounds. The lake is in fine shape, as clear as a crystal and it is called "Atlanta's exhibit" inasmuch as it is furnished by the city water works from a filtered supply. The electric fountain is ready and the electrical display on the grounds proves a great success.

GOLD BUTTON PRESSED.

President Cleveland at Gray Gables Sets the Machinery in Motion.

Buzzards Bay, Mass., Sept. 19.—The special telegraph instrument with which President Cleveland started the machinery at the Atlanta exposition last evening was placed in the president's gun room at Gray Gables, a room adjoining his library. It was in charge of Operator Vilas. On account of some delay the president was not called upon to press the button until after 6 o'clock, but he remained home all the afternoon to be ready when called. At 6:56 p. m. the special wire was disconnected from the telegraph instrument and for one minute the wire was left open, and at the end of twenty seconds Mr. Cleveland pressed the button, which was of solid gold. His thumb was on the annunciator hardly a second, and as soon as Operator Vilas could connect the telegraph key word was received from Atlanta that the machinery started splendidly. In this respect it was a decided success. Those in the room at the house beside the president were Mrs. Cleveland, Mr. Thurber and Misses Ruth and Esther Cleveland and nurse. Miss Ruth was especially interested in all that was going on and stood beside her father when the button was pressed, while Esther sat in her mother's lap. Mrs. Cleveland seemed to take very much interest in the affair and requested that she be called before the button was pressed.

MANEATERS IN FORMOSA.

After an Engagement Wounded Japanese Were Roasted for Food.

San Francisco, Sept. 19.—Advices from Tokio, Japan, state that the maneating propensities attributed by the report to the aborigines of Formosa are said to have been illustrated recently at Anping-Chang. A Japanese detachment attempting to capture the place was repulsed with a loss of twenty killed and wounded. As soon as the assailants retired the garrison sallied out, carried in the Japanese dead and wounded, roasted the latter to death, and then made a feast of the most fitting subjects. When the Japanese captured the place on the following day they found nineteen headless bodies and disemboweled trunks and the bones of the twentieth picked bare.

HONORS TO OUR DEAD

Dedication Exercises at Chickamauga.

The Weather Uncomfortably Warm, But Thousands of Visitors Present—The Famous Spot Now a National Park—State Monuments Turned Over Yesterday.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 19.—Chattanooga is extending a most hospitable welcome to her thousands of visitors and were it not for the extremely hot weather, which is causing much suffering to-day, the day on which the dedication exercises take place, no one would have ought to complain of. The decorations of the city are not only profuse but tasteful and elegant. The day preliminary to the formal dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National park was devoted largely to the exercises in connection with the dedication of state monuments erected at various points within the park. Owing to the absence of Secretary Lamont yesterday the monuments were presented in each instance to Gen. Fullerton, president of the National Park commission. Michigan led off in this pleasing and patriotic service, the commission occupying for that purpose the platform on Snodgrass hill, on which the general dedication exercises will take place this afternoon.

Michigan Monument Dedicated.

The monuments and markers erected upon the battlefield of Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge and Orchard Knob were presented to Gov. Rich by captain and ex-congressman C. E. Belknap, president of the state park commission. After Gov. Rich had accepted the monuments on behalf of the state, Gen. Henry M. Duffield of Detroit, who commanded the Ninth regiment in the war, delivered an eloquent oration.

Notable Event of the Day.

The Ohio dedication followed under direction of Gen. John Beaty, president of the board of commissioners. This was the most elaborate and notable event of the day. Bishop Joyce, of the Methodist church, offered prayer, and addresses were made by Gen. Grosvenor, ex-Gov. Campbell and Gen. Aquilla Wiley, who turned the monuments over to Gov. McKinley, and he in turn to Gen. Fullerton. Members and officers of the state commission also spoke. Illinois dedicated her monuments at the Widow Glenn's house, which was Thomas' headquarters. The address was delivered by Gov. Altgeld.

Dedications Postponed.

Missouri and Pennsylvania commissions had expected to dedicate their monuments or some of them yesterday, but found that they were incomplete. The Pennsylvania monuments are in the shape of bronze panels, which it is the intention to bolt to the rocks on the face of Lookout Mountain. The Pennsylvania ceremony has been postponed until November 18; that of Missouri to a date yet to be fixed.

Massachusetts Monuments.

In the afternoon the Massachusetts delegation dedicated the monuments to the Third and Thirty-second regiments of the state, Gov. Greenhalge making the address. At the completion of the several state dedication exercises the troops in camp Lamont, on the battlefield, under command of Capt. Poland, gave a dress parade, which was witnessed by thousands of spectators.

Famous Wilder Brigade.

Governor Woodbury and staff of Vermont reached here in the morning. There was a reunion of the members of the famous Wilder brigade on the battlefield, where they went into camp near Wilder's monument. Members of various other organizations held meetings in the city and in the park during the day.

ITALY'S RIFLE CONTEST.

Crispi Says Every Italian Should Be Trained in the Use of Arms.

Rome, Sept. 19.—The king and queen of Italy attended the inauguration of the national rifle contest yesterday. There was an enormous crowd present, and a most enthusiastic greeting was given to their majesties. Prime Minister Crispi made a speech, in which he said that every Italian ought to be trained in the use of arms in order to prevent others from misemploying arms against Italy and King Humbert. The Prince of Naples, crown prince of Italy, opened the rifle contest by firing the first shot.

MAY BE MADE GOVERNOR.

Sir Ambrose Shea Looking Up Matters in Newfoundland.

St. John's N. F., Sept. 19.—Sir Ambrose Shea, ex-governor of the Bahamas, who is a native of Newfoundland, arrived last evening from England. It is believed that he is acting as special representative of Mr. Chamberlain, the British colonial secretary, to report on the condition of things here, and that he will probably be appointed governor later on.

RECEPTION FOR DUNRAVEN.

The Town of Cardiff, Wales, Anxious To Honor Him.

London, Sept. 19.—The town of Cardiff, Wales, of which Lord Windsor has accepted the mayoralty, offers to Lord Dunraven a public reception on his return from the United States. Lord Dunraven's chief residence, Dunraven castle, is in Glamorganshire, of which Cardiff is the capital.

Saxton Talks To Farmers.

Oneonta, N. Y., Sept. 19.—Lieutenant-Governor Saxton addressed 8,000 farmers on the fair grounds here yesterday. Mr. Saxton returned to Albany late in the afternoon, as he is acting governor during the absence of Governor Morton.

Phenacetin Smuggling Resumed.

Montreal, Sept. 19.—The smuggling of phenacetin and sulfonal from this city into the United States has been revived on a large scale. Arrests are expected to be made soon.

By order of the Democratic County Elective Committee. JOHN J. MATTHEWS, Ch'n.
A. P. HUGHES, Secretary.
Dated Sept. 9, 1895.

Democrats Attention!

The Democrats of the city of Plainfield are requested to meet at the following named places on Tuesday evening, Sept. 24, at 8 p. m., to elect delegates to the State Convention to be held at Trenton, Sept. 26, to place in nomination a candidate for Governor. The apportionment is as follows:

1st ward, at Hoagland's office, North ave., 1 delegate.
2d ward, Bryant School, 6th st., 1 delegate.
3d ward, Hotel Revere, 1 delegate.
4th ward, Sebring's store, West Front st., 2 delegate.

J. E. MARTINE,
President Democratic Association.

In a letter published in the New York World this morning Attorney-General John P. Stockton says that he is not a candidpte for Governor and could not accept the honor if he was nominated.

An invention has appeared which would seem to make possible the plan, rejected as impracticable by the Marine Congress at Washington, to establish ocean paths for all vessels. The invention consists of an electric steering indicator, and its introduction promises to have considerable influence on the art of navigation. The apparatus indicates constantly in all weathers the longitude, latitude and course of a vessel at sea, making its own correction for compass variations. If this invention should fulfill its promise one of its direct results will be that the trip of a fast steamer between New York and Liverpool will be shortened five or even ten hours from the possibility of maintaining an absolutely straight course.—Electrical Student.

People who know what percentage of verdicts for damages commonly goes to the lawyers who help to secure them, may be pardoned for venturing to think that a Judge of the United States Court does not err on the side of undue liberality when he thinks it necessary to reduce from $10,000 to to $7,000 a verdict for a woman whose husband has been killed, and from $10,000 to $6,000 a verdict in favor of a man who has been so injured as to be incapacitated for work.—Newark News.

JUDGE CODDINGTON REPLIES.

Mr. Hetfield's "Little Boy" Was a Big Bulldozing Man.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—Permit me space in your valuable paper to correct the false and erroneous statements contained in the article published in last night's Courier News over the signature of W. L. Hetfield.

In the first place, Joe Robinson who was arrested by Officer Kiely on Tuesday for peddling without a license, was not "a little boy" as stated in our friend's communication. He was a man taller than the robust officer who made the arrest. He said he was from Newark and admitted that he had peddled in this city without a license, and furthermore threatened to fix the man who made the charge against him. After considering the circumstances of the case I sentenced him to pay a fine of three dollars and in default of the payment thereof to be confined in the county jail for the term of ten days. At first the offender refused to pay his fine, but later when he saw the officer was about to take him to jail, he put his hand in his pocket, took out his money and paid his fine. Hence the man, whom our friend designates as "a little boy" did not go to jail nor have we ascertained that he continued to peddle in the city of Plainfield without a license.

The ordinance provides a penalty of ten dollars for any person or persons who carry on the business of peddler or hawker in the city of Plainfield without a license. The City Court does not make the ordinances. It is the duty of the Court to see that the law is enforced as justice requires. I presume the Common Council enacted the above ordinance for the purpose of protecting our local merchants and tradesmen. There are numerous licensed peddlers in the city of Plainfield, and I consider it extremely unjust to allow persons from other cities to come here and peddle without a license in the face of the peddlers who have paid for that privilege. If the ordinance provided no penalty, what protection would our local merchants, tradesmen and licensed peddlers have?

If Mr. Hetfield had first acquainted himself thoroughly with the facts and circumstances attending the case of which he speaks, I am satisfied he would have taken a different position.

Respectfully yours,
Wm. A. Coddington, City Judge.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. HOW TO FEED BABIES.

Easy to Keep Them Well in This Weather.

They Take to Lactated Food as to Their Mother's Milk.

Teething and Weaning Neither Difficult Nor Dangerous.

A baby's appetite is the surest indicator of its health.

When a child rejects its food, is restless, constantly crying, and shows no gain in weight, the food is at fault. The little one is suffering from indigestion and rapidly losing ground. Strength must necessarily decline, and it is lucky if a sudden rise or fall in temperature, such as September always brings with it, does not cause a fatal attack of diarrhoea or cholera infantum.

Overloading the child's stomach with poorly nourishing food, aggravated with the changes in the weather is the cause of nearly every case of cholera infantum. Sudden changes in temperature, with improper feeding, brings diarrhoea and convulsions.

But with the use of proper food, and there is nothing so absolutely good as lactated food, this danger may be entirely avoided. Statistics show that babies thrive best on lactated food. It is worth more as a preventive of cholera infantum than all the medicines ever made.

The superlative importance of pure, nutritious infant food, and the long study of infant disorders caused by mistakes in diet, led to the preparation of lactated food. Next to pure mother's milk, it is the most nourishing, strengthening, readily digested and palatable food that can be given a baby. It more closely resembles mother's milk than any other food known. Its basis is sugar of milk, which is the basis of mother's milk. With it is combined the nutritive elements of wheat, barley and oats in such proportion as best meets the requirements of the growing child.

In all cases where nursing is inadvisable or impossible, the infant's health is best protected by weaning and using lactated food altogether.

Thousands of babies fed from a very early age on lactated food have never known a sick day. And as many more little ones have been saved by this best of infant nutriments—lactated food.

SAVED HIS LIFE

What Munyon's Remedies Did for a Prominent Ohioan.

He Could Eat But Little and Was in Constant Pain—Cured With One Bottle.

W. T. Loffer, a well known resident of Kent, Ohio, says that Munyon's Dyspepsia Cure undoubtedly saved his life. In relating his experience he said: "For a long time I have been afflicted with dyspepsia. I could eat scarcely anything and was in constant pain. The gas on my stomach distended it greatly and my heart became affected. I was troubled with short breathing, fluttering and irregular beating of the heart, and often the pain was so great that I thought I was going to die. My friends wanted me to try Munyon's Dyspepsia Cure, but I had tried so many different medicines without being benefited that I thought this would be only one more fruitless effort. Finally I began using it, and the result was wonderful. After the first bottle I could eat without discomfort, and am now thoroughly cured."

Munyon's Stomach and Dyspepsia Cure cures all forms of indigestion and stomach troubles such as constipation, rising of food, distress after eating, bloating of the stomach, palpitation of the heart, shortness of breath and all affections of the heart cause by indigestion. It soothes, heals, and invigorates stomachs that have been weakened by over-eating, or where the lining of the stomach has been impaired by physic and other injurious medicines. Price 25 cents.

Munyon's Homœopathic Home Remedy Company, of Philadelphia, put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25 cents a bottle.

Those who are in doubt as to the nature of their disease should address Professor Munyon, 1505 Arch street, Philadelphia, giving full symptoms of their disease. Professor Munyon will carefully diagnose the case and give you the benefit of his advice absolutely free of all charge. The Remedies will be sent to any address on receipt of retail price.

SOME GOOD KICKERS.

A Football Enthusiast Wants the Y. M. C. A. to Have a Crack Team.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I notice in a recent issue of your paper that the Y. M. C. A. of this and adjoining cities have formed a football league. This city has never had a good representative team—why can we not have one now? This team, I understand, is to be formed exclusively from the Y. M. C. A. who only have among their members a very few who can claim to be among the representative players.

Why not make it an object for other players to join the association that we may have a really good team? Then there is the matter of "coaches." Why not get some such men as Louis Waring, Walter Stuart or Louis Darling, who have a good knowledge of the game. Lou Darling is the best fullback in these parts and his fine kicking, especially "drops," would benefit the team immensely. Stuart is an old end-man and Waring is strong in the line. Why not get these three men, if possible, to coach the three departments? Enthusiast.

Eat, Drink and Be Merry

Ethical teachers freely grant man's right to happiness. How can he enjoy life any better than by taking a day off at the Fair. Apart from the mere pleasure (and that's an important thing in this workaday world), there is much to learn at such an exposition that it actually pays a man to go to the Fair and acquire a liberal education. He will go home refreshed and recreated; he will have acquired new ideas and methods for his work, and he will have been broadened by running against new ideas. The unsuccessful farmer, merchant or artisan is the one who stays at home all the time and lives on a small stock of ideas until he is impoverished. This applies to the wife and children, too. Don't forget them, but bring them along for a day at the Fair.

September 30 to October 4 are the dates.

The New Reformatory.

The commissioners having charge of the building of the State Reformatory at Rahway will hold a meeting on Friday at the office of Thomas M. Gopsill in Jersey City to arrange for the advertising for proposals to do the work. The plans drawn by Architect J. R. Thomas, of New York, have been accepted by the commissioners, and the work of constructing the sewer which is to drain the grounds will be commenced next week, if possible. Mayor Daly, who is one of the the Commission, said that the printed stories about dissatisfaction among the commissioners over the site were false. City Surveyor Clark, of Rahway, will look after the preliminary work of surveying and staking out the site.

Harrigan Tonight.

"Old Lavender" shows a convivial gentleman, Harrigan himself, who is cashier in his brother's bank, and a scheming villain, who runs away with the banker's wife, after passing a forged check on the doubly duped husband. The brother is unjustly suspected of complicity, is discharged from his position and becomes a homeless wanderer around the docks.

The happy reunion of the brothers is, fortunately, postponed until the end of the third act, for in the mean time Mr. Harrigan has the opportunity to do some excellent character acting. It is a finished performance that can have few or no rivals in its line, and should be seen by all admirers of real comedy. Mr. Harrigan will appear at Music Hall tonight.

The October Forum.

The Hon. Charles S. Fairchild, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, has written for the October number of The Forum an article entitled "The Present Condition of the Silver Question in the United States." In his opinion there are no more advocates of the free-silver policy today than there were a year ago; he thinks that those opposed to that policy are far more outspoken now than they were then, and that the sound-money cause is rapidly gaining ground.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The Eldridge Bicycle Company has just received a combination Columbia tandem.

Edgar Sheppard and George Townley are planning a cycling trip to Flemington for Sunday.

The Y. M. C. A. cyclists take a run this evening, starting from the Y. M. C. A. building at seven o'clock sharp. Summit will probably be their destination.

The first of Captain Lister's regular runs will be held this evening. The riders start from the clubhouse at eight o'clock and their destination is Lorraine.

It has been decided to run off the postponed ten-mile race of the Metropolitan Association of Cycling Clubs on October 5th or 11th, at Elizabeth. The clubs entered are the Kings County Wheelmen, Prospect Wheelmen, Manhattan Bicycle Club, Elizabeth Wheelmen, and Greenwich Wheelmen.

At least two concerns will pay particular attention—if not their entire attention—to making ladies' wheels in future. We have advocated the idea for more than a year, and feel sure that the firm or firms who pay particular if not exclusive attention to wheels for women, will meet with great success. In the past manufacturers have not paid sufficient attention to woman's wants. Let the woman's wheel be of beautiful build and finish.—American Wheelman.

JERSEY "WASH DAY."

A Salt Water Festival on the Coast of Sea Girt.

Mrs. Burton Harrison, in an article on "American Rural Festivals" in the Century for July, writes as follows:

Of those which I have seen, and those of which I have been able to gather accounts, the one smacking most pleasantly of old time rustic revelry, and therefore to be offered honorable precedence in this recital, is the "Salt Water Day," or "Wash Day," of the New Jersey farmers, that since time out of mind has been celebrated on the second Saturday in the month of August, upon the coast at Sea Girt.

To make this Jersey holiday, assemble a thousand back country vehicles of all sorts, from the hooded farm wagon, which has not greatly altered its pattern for centuries, to the rude buckboard and the pert sulky. The horses are withdrawn from shafts or pole to be tethered behind the wagons or picketed at a little distance in the rear. Around the impromptu camp gather people enough to blacken half a mile of the sandy shore—people who for months have been looking forward to the occasion as the chief holiday of the year.

Cedar chest and camphor trunk and flowered bandbox have been called upon to disgorge their treasures; but there is no other attempt at costuming than the assumption of mere Sunday best. An odd feature of the great concourse is the seriousness with which it takes its pleasure. A solemn, even strained, expression of determination to revel or die sits upon the majority of faces. During the unharnessing of the wagons, which have been arriving upon the scene since early dawn—camping over night not being infrequent—the good wives unpack their luncheon baskets, take tally of their pies, and, if need be, while away the time by methodically administering punishment of the good old-fashioned variety to their impatient youngsters.

Around the outside of the concourse are seen the booths and rostrums of the fakirs attracted from New York by the promise of rich harvest from the farmers' wallets. There is also a rifle range, a merry-go-round and a doll target at which balls are thrown for prizes. Many another cheap diversion offers itself during the explorations of the farmer and his wife and clamoring progency, and more than one pinch of dire experience falls to the lot of the paying member of the party. The nasal cries of the Yankee Autolycus offering his inkles, caddises and lawns are continually heard above the swelling murmurs of Jersey joviality.

Fairing over, there is a general retreat to the tent dressing rooms, improvised with shawls and canvas curtains in connection with the vehicles. The great annual bath of the pilgrims is next in order, and down to the shining reach of ocean, where the crisping billows hurry in, presently troop the queerest procession of bathers ever seen out of a caricature.

Many of the men and boys, disdaining change of dress, go into the water in their ordinary clothes, sunning themselves afterward in the hot sand until toasted dry again. Others put on shirts from which the sleeves had been removed and trousers cut off at the knee. The bathing outfit of the women reveals droll miscellanies of bygone fashion in cut and texture, some of the more coy among the matrons including pantalets, sunbonnets and gloves.

With sober mirth, demure smiles, suppressed cries of excitement, the phalanx moves into the surf, taking hands to jump discreetly up and down in long lines, safe within the danger line. To the greater number this venture into the sea is actually no more than an annual experience.

After the bath, noontime turns all thoughts dinnerward, and the camp settles down into one vast picnic. Pies of all kinds suggest the litany—chanted without taking breath—of the feminine hotel waiter in the ears of the summer boarder:

"Apple pie, mince pie, custard pie, lemon pie, squash pie and pie plant pie." Doughnuts (called "nuts" in the vernacular), cheese in liberal wedges, ham sandwiches, hard boiled eggs, and pickles, supply the favorite menu; and lemonade and rootbeer—perchance a stronger beverage—are produced in bottles each confessing by label a different intention in its earlier career.

Then, while the summer sun slants in the cloudless heaven, the merriment goes on to its climax, more dips in the ocean are taken, more money changes hands, more solid food is consumed, till at last the shades of evening close upon the scene, and a general hitching up of teams betokens the end of Salt Water day at Sea Girt.

A Canary Kills a Rat.

Joseph Thompson, a deputy clerk of the Criminal Court, and at one time a prominent candidate for the Mayoralty of Baltimore, has a canary of which he has always been very proud. He is prouder of the little bird than ever now, on account of the fact that last Thursday night, after a desperate fight with a rat, the little yellow fellow came off a victor.

Just before the family retired to rest on Thursday night at their residence, 1321 North Eden street, Mrs. Thompson placed the bird cage on the sideboard in the dining room. During the night a half grown rat forced itself into the cage and proceeded to devour the birds food. This was the beginning of the trouble. The canary flew from its perch and the battle began.

When Mrs. Thompson came into the dining room the next morning she found a dead rodent lying on its back on the floor of the bird cage, while the canary was singing merrily from its perch above. The beak of the bird had penetrated the eye of the rat, entering the brain and causing instant death.—Baltimore Herald.

A GRAND, SWEET SONG

A SONG WRITER INSPIRED BY MR. CLEVELAND'S LETTER.

Thrilled By the President's Description of His Married Life, He is Steeped in Joy for Two Days, and Then Bursts into Song.

When Edgar Deering, of Brooklyn, the author of several popular songs, read that celebrated letter written by President Cleveland to Col. John Temple Graves, of Georgia, the manner in which the President described his wedded life struck him as being remarkably fine. Mr. Deering read the letter over two or three times, and with each reading the beauty of "one grand, sweet song" grew upon him.

Within two days, inspired by the words quoted by the nation's Chief Executive, Mr. Deering had written a song. It is entitled, "Life is One Grand, Sweet Song," and is as follows:

Life is one grand, sweet song,
That swells triumphant from our listening ears:
Grandly its strains proclaim,
Re-echoing sweetly o'er the rolling years.
Its cadence reaches to earth's remotest bound,
As its tale of love and joy it tells,
Wherever love finds its own 'twill there be found
Still weaving its magic spells.

CHORUS:

Life is one grand, sweet song,
Grandly its strains proclaim,
Bearing its message sweet,
Telling of joy complete,
Life is one grand, sweet song,
Thrilling our souls along,
Life is one grand, sweet song,
That tells of love without alloy

Life is one grand, sweet song
That loving hearts each to each are ever singing,
Telling in accents strong
The message sweet that it is bringing.
As long as soul toucheth soul with love divine,
E'en when life no longer thrills the clay
We'll have sweet converse together at the shrine
Of love, in that perfect day.

As soon as Mr. Deering had completed the words and music of this production he mailed a copy of each to Mr. Cleveland at Buzzard's Bay, sending a note at the same time explaining the origin of the song and saying some nice things about the President. Within a week he received the following reply, written by the President:

GRAY GABLES, BUZZARD'S BAY.

EDGAR DEERING, Esq.

DEAR SIR—I have received the music you kindly sent me, and desire to thank you for it and the friendly expressions contained in the accompanying letter. Yours very truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Mr. Deering said yesterday that he regarded the song as inspired. A facsimile of the President's letter will be printed on the title page of each copy of "Life is One Grand, Sweet Song."

Hot Weather Fun in New York.

"Hi, Chimmy, see the mug soakin' his head!" yelled a street urchin at the corner of West and Barclay streets the other day.

"Watch me!" yelled Jimmy, another urchin, and he came down the street full tilt. The man soaking his head was a truck driver. He was holding his head under a pump and was pumping at the same time. On came Jimmy. He was barefooted and made no noise. He was also bareheaded and rugged. Two feet in the rear of the truckman he rose up and dived headforemost. He struck the truckman head on just back of the hips. There was a wild yell, a kerplunk, and a big splash of water in the trough under the pump. The truckman was at the bottom. Jimmy was in the trough, too, but he was on top. There was a slashing of legs and arms. Jimmy slid out and scudded up the street. The truckman came up spluttering and cursing. He saw Jimmy scudding.

The handiest thing to throw was a watermelon. It was a big one. The truckman grabbed it and succeeded in hurling it twenty feet after the scudding Jimmy, who was twenty yards away. As he threw it the truckman started to run. The man who owned the melon grabbed him. Jimmy's companion started to run, too. He reached the melon, which had broken in four pieces, with a hop, skip and a jump, and gathered up the fragments. Then he scudded after Jimmy. The truckman stopped and cursed. The owner demanded pay for the melon, and finally compromised on half value. The truckman shook himself, climbed on his wagon, whipped up his horse, and started down the street in the direction the urchins had gone. There was no report of a boy killed during the day, and it is not believed that he overtook them.—New York Sun.

A Horse of Another Color.

"It is something," mused the poet, "to have an imagination that scorns the bondage of earth and soars untrammeled through the cerulean infinity."

He paused to jot the phrase "cerulean infinity" in his notebook, hoping to make use of it at some future time.

"But——"

He gazed wistfully into the window of a cheap restaurant where the white-robed cook was industriously turning sinkers, "to have the price of a plate of ham and beans in your pocket is another thing."

He sighed meekly and once more mingled with the hurrying throng.—Truth.

A Roadside Appeal.

They paused beneath the shade of a spreading oak.

The tall man with the eleven years' growth of beard looked earnestly into the face of his companion.

"Bill," he asked, solemnly, "will you not share your crust with me?"

Tears sprang into the eyes of the short party with a long coat and no shirt.

"Hank," he observed, gazing upon the citron pie he held in his hand, "you're always looking for the best of it. Do——"

CHAPTER IV.

At this instant, in the room in the gate-tower of the castle overlooking the moat there had fallen a dead silence. Here Count Nikolas had raised the princess, set her on a couch, and waited till her faintness and fright were gone. Then he had come near to her and in brief, harsh tones told her his mind. For him indeed the dice were now cast; he had in his fury and fear dared all. He was calm now, with the calmness of a man at a great turn of fate. That room, he told her, she should never leave alive, save as his promised wife, sworn and held to secrecy and silence by the force of that bond and of her oath. If he killed her, he must die, whether by his own hand or the king's mattered little. But he would die for a great cause and in a great attempt. "I shall not be called a cheating gamester, madame," said he, a smile on his pale face. "I choose death sooner than dishonor. "I choose death sooner than dishonor. Such is my choice. What is yours? It stands between death and silence; and no man but your husband will dare to trust your silence."

"You dare not kill me," said she defiantly.

"Madame, I dare do nothing else. They may write murderer on my tomb; they shall not throw 'cheat' in my living face."

"I will not be silent," cried Osra, springing to her feet. "And rather than be your wife, I would die a thousand times. For a cheat you are—a cheat—a cheat." And her voice rose, till he feared that she would be heard, if anyone chanced to listen, even from so far off in the hall. Yet he made one more effort, seeking to move her by an appeal to which women are not wont to be insensible.

"A cheat, yes!" said he. "I, Nikolas of Festenburg, am a cheat. I say it, though no other man shall while I live to hear him. But to gain what stake?"

"Why, my brother's castle of Zenda."

"I swear to you it was not," he cried, coming nearer to her. "I did not fear losing on that cast, but I could not endure not to win. Not my stake, madame, but yours, lured me to my foul play. Have you your face and yet do not know to what it drives men?"

"If I have a fair face, it should inspire fair deeds," said she. "Do not touch me, sir, do not touch me. I loathe breathing the same air with you or so much as seeing your face. Aye, and I can die. Even he women of our house know how to die."

At her scorn and contempt a great rage came upon him, and he gripped the hilt of his sword and drew it from the scabbard. But she stood still, facing him with calm eyes. Her lips moved for a moment in prayer, but she did not shrink.

"I pray you," said he, in trembling speech, and mastering himself for an instant. "I pray you!" and he could say no more.

"I will cry your cheatlag in all Strelsau," said she.

"Then commend your soul to God. For in one minute you shall die."

Still she stood motionless; and he began to come near to her, his sword now drawn in his hands. And, coming within the distance from which he could strike her, he paused and gazed into her eyes. She answered him with a smile. Then there was for an instant the utter stillness in the room; and in that instant the Bishop of Modenstein set his foot on the staircase and came running up. On a sudden Osra heard the step, and a gleam flushed in her eye. The count heard it also, and his sword was arrested in its stroke. A smile came on his face. He was glad at the coming of some one whom he might kill in fight; for it turned him sick to butcher her, unresisting. Yet he dared not let her go to cry his cheating in the streets of Strelsau.

The steps came nearer. He dropped his sword on the floor and sprang upon her. A shriek rang out, but he pressed his hand on her mouth and seized her in his arms. She had no strength to resist, and he carried her swiftly across the room to a door in the wall. He pulled the door open—it was very massive and heavy—and he flung her roughly down on the stone floor of a little chamber, square and lofty, having but one small window high up through which the moonlight scarcely pierced. She fell with a moan of pain. Unheeding he turned on his heel and shut the door. And as he turned, he heard a man throw himself against the door of the room. It also was strong; and twice the man flung himself with all his force against it. At last it strained and gave way; and the Bishop of Modenstein burst into the room breathless. And he saw no trace of the princess' presence, but only Count Nikolas standing sword in hand in front of the door in the wall with a sneering smile on his face.

The Bishop of Modenstein never loved to speak afterwards of what followed, saying always that he rather deplored than gloried in it, and that when a man of his sacred profession was forced to use the weapons of this world it was a matter of grief to him, not of vaunting. But the king compelled him by urgent requests to describe the whole matter, while the princess was never weary of telling all that she knew or of blessing all bishops for the sake of the bishop of Modenstein. Yet the bishop blamed himself, perhaps, if the truth were known, not for the necessity that drove him to what he did, as for a secret and ashamed joy that he detected in himself. For certainly, as he burst into the room now, there was no sign of reluctance or of unwillingness in his face; he took off his feathered cap, bowed politely to the count, and, resting the point of his sword on the floor asked:

"My lord, where is the princess?"

"What do you want here, and who are you?" cried the count, with a blasphemous oath.

"When we were boys together, you knew Fredrick of Hentzau. Do you not now know the Bishop of Modenstein?"

"Bishop! This is no place for bishops. Get back to your prayers, my lord."

"It wants some time yet before matins," answered the bishop. "My lord, where is the princess?"

"What do you want with her?"

"I am here to escort her wherever it may be her pleasure to go." He spoke confidently, but he was in his heart alarmed and uneasy because he had not found the princess.

"I do not know where she is," said Nikolas of Festenburg.

"My lord, you lie," said the Bishop of Modenstein.

The count had wanted nothing but an excuse for attacking the intruder. He had it now, and an angry flush mounted in his cheeks as he walked across to where the bishop stood. Shifting his sword to his left hand, he struck the bishop on the face with his gloved hand. The bishop smiled and turned the other cheek to Count Nikolas, who struck him again with all his force, so that he reeled back, catching hold of the open door to avoid falling; and the blood started dull red under the skin of his face. But he still smiled, and he bowed, saying:

"I find nothing about the third blow in Holy Scripture."

At this instant the Princess Osra, who had been half stunned by the violence with which Nikolas had thrown her on the floor, came to her full senses, and, hearing the bishop's voice, she cried out loudly for help. He, hearing her, darted in an instant across the room and was at the door of the little chamber before the count could stop him. He pulled the door open and Osra sprang out to him, saying:

"Save me! Save me!"

"You are safe, madame, have no fear," answered the bishop. And, turning to the count, he continued, "Let us go outside, my lord, and discuss this matter. Our dispute will disturb and perhaps alarm the princess."

And a man might have read the purpose in his eyes, though his manner and words were gentle; for he had sworn in his heart that the count should not escape.

But the count cared as little for the presence of the princess as he had for her dignity, her honor, or her life; and now that she was no longer wholly at his mercy, but there was a new chance that she might escape, his rage and the fear of exposure lashed him to fury; and, without more talking, he made at the bishop, crying, "You first and then her! I'll be rid of the pair of you!"

The bishop faced him, standing between Princess Osra and his assault; while she shrank back a little, sheltering herself behind the heavy door. For, although she had been ready to die without fear, yet the sight of men fighting frightened her, and she veiled her face with her hands, and waited in dread to hear the sound of their swords clashing. But the bishop looked very happy, and setting his cap on his head with a jaunty air, he stood on guard. For ten years or more he had not used his sword, but the secret of its mastery seemed to revive, fresh and clear in his mind, and let his soul say what it would, his body rejoced to be at the exercise again; so that his blood kindled and his eyes gleamed in the glee of strife. Thus he stepped forward, guarding himself, and thus he met the count's impetuous onset; and he neither flinched nor gave back, but finding himself holding his own he pressed on and on, not violently attacking and yet never resting, and turning every thrust with a wrist of iron. And while Osra gazed with wide eyes and close-held breath, and Count Nikolas muttered oaths and grew more furious, the bishop seemd as gay as when he talked to the king, more gaily, maybe, than bishops should. Again his eye danced as in the days when he had been called the "wildest of the Hentzaus." And still he drove Count Nikolas back and back.

Now behind the count was a window which he had himself caused to be enlarged and made low and wide, in order that he might look from it over the surrounding country, but in time of war it was covered with a close and strong iron grating. But now the grating was off and the window open; and beneath this window was a fall of seventy feet or hard upon it into the moat below. The count looked into the bishop's face and saw him smile, and suddenly he recollected the window, and fancied that it was the bishop's design to drive him on to it so that he could give back no more, and, since he knew by now that the bishop was his master with the sword, a despairing rage settled upon him, and, determining to die swiftly since die he must, he rushed forward, making a desperate lunge at his enemy. But the bishop parried the lunge, and, always seeming to be about to run the count through the body, again forced him to retreat, till his back was close to the opening of the window. Here Nikolas stood, his eyes glaring like a madman's; then a sudden devilish smile spread over his face.

"Will you yield yourself, my lord?" cried the bishop, putting a restraint on the wicked impulse to kill the man, and lowering his point for an instant.

In that short moment the count made his last throw; for all at once, as it seemed, and almost in one motion he thrust and wounded the bishop in the left side of his body, high in the chest near the shoulder, and though the wound was slight, the blood flowed freely; then, drawing back his sword, he seized it by the blade halfway up and flung it like a javelin at the princess, who stood still by the door, breathlessly watching the fight. By an ace it missed her head, and it pinned a tress of her hair to the door and quivered deepest in the wood of the door.

LOOK IN THE CLOSET

SEE if you can't find some old clothes that you have put aside because of the worn-out look they have, or some clothes that are badly spotted.

We want you to bring any old clothes of that sort to us—or better yet—we'll send for them.

We propose to clean those clothes—or to dye them for you—either way to make them wearable. This is an economical suggestion.

We take out grease spots so they stay out, or we dye clothes with a color that wears. We charge as little as possible for the work.

Just a dollar or two—and you'll have a lot of new clothes.

His Checks Were "No Good"

A well-dressed gilb-tongued young man, calling himself Max Frank, and pretending to be the representative of a Philadelphia clothing firm, came to Rahway Friday and said he was going to do business on a scale that was simply amazing. He got a lot of job work done at the office of the Union County Democrat, and prevailed upon the proprietor, Judge Lewis H. Hyer, to have a check cashed for him. He rented a store from Joseph Mead, and got him to cash another check. Frank ran up a board bill at Lambert's hotel and worked off a few checks on the landlord. Now Frank is missing and his checks are coming back marked "No good."

PINK AND GREEN WEDDING.

CHARMING NUPTIAL EVENT CELEBRATED AT DUNELLEN.

Marriage of Miss Mabel Burniston to Wm. Hamilton, Jr.—Ceremony Performed Under a Wedding Bell.—Names of Guests.

At the home of T.C. Bodine, in Dunellen, yesterday at four o'clock, took place a pretty home wedding. The contracting parties were Wm. Hamilton, Jr., of Hackensack, and Miss Mabel Burniston, of Dunellen. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Davis, of Elizabeth, an uncle of the bride, assisted by Rev. A. I. Martine, of the Presbyterian church in Dunellen. The bride was attired in white satin, with veil, and carried a bouquet of orange blossoms.

The prevailing tints in the decorations of the house were were green and pink. The ceremony was performed under an arch, in the centre of which was a miniature bell, making a very pretty altar. The bride was given away by her father.

The bridemaid was Miss Eva Bodine, and Mr. Barrett was best man. The ushers were John Curtis, of Kingston, and John Bollemus, of Newark.

As the time approached for the bride and groom to leave, the guests gathered in front to give them the proverbial lucky shower of rice, but the newly married couple endeavored to escape these congratulations by making an exit from the rear. They were observed, however, and the party gave chase and gave a great farewell for the honeymoon, which will be spent at Orange.

Among those invited were: Miss S. Gray, Miss C. Williams, Rev. A. I. Martine and wife, of Dunellen; Mrs. Hamilton, Mrs. Stryker, of Hackensack; Miss Myria Runyon, of Plainfield; Miss Howell, the Misses Stryker, of Somerville; Miss Young, of Trenton; Harold Tomlinson and wife, of Plainfield; Mr. and Mrs. Staats, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Davis, of Nyack; Mrs. Perlumes, of Newark.

THE LAST CONCERT CHANGED.

The Sewer Trenches Are In the Way at Franklin Square.

The next open-air concert of Saturday evening will not take place at the corner of Franklin place and LaGrande on account of the sewers, as The Daily Press stated. Councilman Frost now announces that the last concert of the season will be held at the corner of Watchung and LaGrande avenues, in front of the Crescent Avenue church. Guttman's band will as usual furnish the music and the programme will be the same as published some time ago exclusively in The Daily Press. It will be printed again tomorrow, however, for the benefit of those who wish to carry it inside their hat.

Factories May Be Built.

The transfer of more than 100 acres of land to the Orange Industrial Association has been recorded in the office of the Union County Clerk during the last week. The property lies on the road from Cranford to Springfield. It is said that several fretories will be built on the property. This is the land where it was reported some months ago that the Pullman Car Company contemplated moving their shops to.

Elizabeth Bound to Have a Depot.

It is said that unless the Pennsylvania Railroad Company erects a new station by December 28th, the city will take legal steps to force it to do so, as the five years which the city gave it to elevate the tracks and build a station will have expired.

A New Restaurant.

One of the new stores in the Jacob Voehl building on East Front street will be opened as the ladies' and gent's cafe and restaurant about October 1st by S. C. Rogers of New York.

No Baseball After All.

There will be no baseball game played by the Y. M. C. A. nine tomorrow afternoon as no date with any other club could be made.

John G. Mauger Editor of the Sunbeam, Seligman, Mo., who named Grover Cleveland for the Presidency in November 1882, while he was Mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says: "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as staple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

GERMANS ENTERTAIN.

Programme Rendered in the Saengerbund Hall Last Night.

The delightful weather brought out a good attendance to witness a first-class performance given in Saengerbund Hall las evening for the benefit of the German Reformed church, of Craig place. The programme was followed by a dance at which Prof. O'Reilly furnished the music. The entertainment consisted of an overture by Prof. O'Reilly's orchestra, a declamation by M. Schoettlin, a recitation by Miss Lilly Haberle, a baritone solo by Charles Dresselt, a German dialogue in one act entitled "It Was I," in which the different parts were taken by August Wolff, Miss Ecke, Miss Ida Feller, B. Bostler, Mrs. M. Moenzenbach, and M. Schoettlin. Then followed another selection by Prof. O'Reilly, a declamation by H. Klinsmann, vocal solo by Miss Ecke, a recitation by Miss Lilly Haberle, and an English dialogue, "A Catch at Last" in which the parts were acted by Mrs. F. Bach, August Wolff, and M. Schettlin. A selection by Prof. O'Reilly closed the entertainment, and then the floor was cleared for dancing, and to the lively music of violin and piano the dancers kept it up until the morning hours.

The committee in charge consisted of M. Moenzenbach. August Wolff, Charles Firenger and T. Mowenkle.

MADE A MISTAKE.

Y. M. C. A. Cyclists Go to a Festival and Find a Prayer Meeting.

The recent rains left the roads in fine condition for wheeling and made last evening an ideal one for a run. The Y. M. C. A. cyclers took advantage of it and rode down to Springfield under the command of Captain T. A. Cuming.

When passing the little schoolhouse at Locust Grove some of the boys noticed a number of people going there carrying bundles. The general census of opinion was that a peach festival was to be held and it was decided unanimously that a halt should be called there on the return. The thought of delicious peaches and ice cream inspired the cyclists and they flew along at a lively pace. When the schoolhouse was again reached they dismounted and all anticipation entered the building to find to their amazement a prayer meeting in progress. During the service Rev. D. A. McPhie told the reason of their visit and a general laugh followed. When the meeting broke up the cyclists started forth again without the wished-for peaches or cream.

MUST PAY THEIR POLL TAX.

Collectors After 250 Delinquents at the Big Singer Works.

Several deputy tax collectors of Elizabeth visited the Singer Sewing Machine Works, yesterday, intending to serve notices on about 250 workmen who were in arrears for poll tax. Supt. Miller, of the works, was at Trenton attending the Republican State Convention, and the tax collectors withdrew without completing their mission. They will make another visit to the works early next week, when all the employes who have not settled by that time will have the alternative of paying or going to jail.

Irving W. Larimore, physical director of Y. M. C. A., Des Moines, Iowa, says he can conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm to athletes, gymnasts, bicyclists, football players and the profession in general for bruises, sprains and dislocations; also for soreness and stiffness of the muscles. When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North ave nues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

WALKED FOR A CAKE.

Revere House Waiters Had a Jolly Time Last Night.

A large attendance and beautiful weather made the first ball of the Revere House Social Club at the Central Hall last evening a great success. The crowd began to gather soon after eight o'clock and at twelve the new arrivals had increased in numbers until the floor was crowded with dancers. The great event of the evening was, of course, the cake walk. The cake was an immense affair, a triumph for the caterer with its highly decorated mound on top. There were eight couples that contested for it, who were as follows: R. Hopkins and Miss C. Perkins, J. Dunham and Miss R. Davis, J. Glouer and Miss McCarr, of Brooklyn, J. Washington and Mrs. Jennie Henderson, T. Thompson and Miss Georgie Armstrong, L. Peterson and Miss C. Jenkins, W. Wilson and Miss Florence Wilson, of New York. The last named couple won the cake after one of the most exciting walks Plainfield has seen. The judges in the contest were three white and three colored men, G. H. Amstrong, G. H. Armstrong, Jr., Geo. B. De Reve, J. Potter, A. Huff, and Howard Grobes.

Prof. Guttman's orchestra furnished the music. W. J. Davis was in charge of the sale of the tickets, while G. H. Henderson acted as floor manager.

WRECKED AT DUNELLEN.

A Coal and a Passenger Train Crash Together This Morning.

A west bound train of empty coal cars ran into train No. 28 at Dunellen this morning at about half past five o'clock. Train No. 28 is made up at Dunellen and is due to leave there at 5:30. The train was just crossing out on to the fourth track when the coal train came along and the two engines collided. No one was hurt, but the wreckage from the engines and the coal cars was spread over the four main tracks. Two were cleared shortly before eight o'clock by a wrecking train from Jersey City, but the tracks from the roundhouse were completely blockaded and cars had to be sent from Jersey City to Plainfield, and the trains that pass through Plainfield at 8:27 and 8:31, which start from Dunellen, were made up here, and run as one train. As there was no turntable, the engine had to pull the train to New York backward.

BIG FORESTER GATHERING.

The Independent Order Will Have a State Reunion in Elizabeth.

The Independent Forester of Elizabeth and State will gather in the Drake Opera House in Elizabeth next Tuesday night. The occasion will be a grand union meeting of all the courts in that city, at which the attendance of all the courts in the State has been invited. From the reports that are now being made the gathering will be one of the largest of any secret or beneficial order ever Banker, Rev. Geo. Buckle and Willett T. Bingham, will each make a few short remarks, and as each is an interesting talker and all have interesting things to tell of there is no end of pleasure promised for those who attend.

Ex-Congressman Dunn a Defendant.

Ex-Congressman John T. Dunn was defendant in a suit tried in the Hudson County Circuit Court on Monday. The plaintiff, John J. Hickey, of 223 Avenue D., Bayonne, a former clerk in Mr. Dunn's law office, sued for the recovery of $418.17, which he claimed was due him for services rendered. A nonsuit was ordered by Judge Lippincott on the ground of non-performance of duty on Hickey's part.

MISS HOGARTY BRINGS SUIT.

She Denies Being Implicated in the Jailbreaking Conspiracy.

Miss Mamie Hogarty, of New Brunswick, has brought suit against Thomas Kelly, also of that city, to vindicate her good name. She was arrested upon the information furnished in an affidavit of Thomas Kelly, who alleged that Miss Hogarty assisted in smuggling the burglar saws into the jail. She was honorably discharged by William F. Harkins, City Recorder.

Peter F. Daly, counsel for Miss Hogarty, has characterized the girl's arrest as an outrage, and the charge against Kelly is made as a means of proving publicly that they were foundless, and restoring to the girl her former unblemished reputation. The charge against Kelly will go before the Grand Jury.

Kelly at present is in jail on two charges, one of being a suspicsous character, and the other for robbery. It is also alleged that he is connected with the jail-breaking conspicacy, being charged by the Prosecutor's office with being one of the conspirators.

Its Weight is Sixteen Tons—Will Soon be Given a Trial.

The steam street roller, when in running order with coal, water, engineer, etc, will weigh sixteen tons. The roller will be steered by steam apparatus. There is one large roller on each side of the machine, between which is the boiler and engine. The rollers are so built that they can be fitted with large steel spikes, which are used to break the hard crust on the surface of the earth, after which the spikes are removed and the perfectly smooth rollers run over the ground. The cost of the roller was $2,990. John H. Porter has been engaged as engineer. As soon as a representative of the company that sold the machine arrives, the roller will be unloaded and given a trial, after which it will be put to work on streets sewered by Prout & Company.

He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmrcy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

JOHNSON MURDERER OF ONE ONLY.

Idle Charge Against the Colored Evangelist at Somerville.

All the authorities in Somerville are of the opinion that there is no truth in the story printed yesterday to the effect that Jacob Johnson, the colored preacher who is accused of the murder of Annie Rogers, was implicated in the Hamilton murder case at Winfield, L. I.

On May 1st, 1892, a colored woman named Annie Hamilton was strangled near Winfield. Her throat was then cut and her body thrown into a pond of muddy water. Her husband, James L. Hamilton, a colored evangelist, was electrocuted for the crime.

It is said that while in jail Hamilton accused Jacob S. Johnson, a hoodoo doctor, of murdering his wife, and an attempt has been made to connect the Jacob Johnson in jail at Somerville with the crime.

Johnson was interviewed in his cell last night and carefully questioned as to his whereabouts during 1892, when the Hamilton murder was committed. Without knowing that suspicion of the Hamilton murder had been directed against him he said he had never lived on Long Island in his life, and finally concluded with the statement, when the direct question was put to him, that he never knew anybody by the name of Hamilton and was never before implicated in a murder or any other crime.

The body of Annie Rogers was buried yesterday afternoon in the colored cemetery about a mile from Somerville. Her aged husband was in attendance, having come from Newark, and the dead girl was followed to the grave by a morbid throng of whites and blacks. There was no ceremony.

CAPTURED BY HER WHEEL.

Miss Garrison's Dress Becomes Entangled, But is Finally Released.

A lady's wheel, without a chain guard, is a dangerous thing to ride, and many a fall has resulted from the dress being caught in the sprocket and chain. What came very near being a serious accident happened to Miss Garrison, of Jersey City, this noon through this cause. Miss Garrison, who is visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Calvin Neighbor, of East Front street, was riding down Front street on a lady's wheel when her dress caught in the chain and sprocket wheel dragging her from the saddle.

She tried to release herself from this involuntary imprisonment but the more she tried to unfasten the tangle the worse it became. Chief Marshal Van Horn, of the borough, came to her aid but with no better results. At last J. J. Kenney appeared and invited Miss Garrison and her captor to come to his store. The offer was accepted and Mr. Kenney assisted by Sergeant Kiely soon released Miss Garrison from her unpleasant predicament.

A Wedding Reception.

A delightful reception was given in honor of the recent marriage of Miss Belle Swayne, of Summit, to William F. Wyckoff, Jr., of Washington Valley, at the home of Mr. Wyckoff, Sr., in Washing Valley, last evening. About one hundred and fifty guests were present from Summit, Morristown, Plainfield and surrounding towns.

Most of the evening was spent in dancing, while at midnight an elaborate collation was served. The gay party broke up at four o'clock this morning.

The display last Saturday, which was said to be one of the finest ever made in Plainfield, they will make every effort to surpass.

GRANDMOTHERS ENTERTAIN.

A NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT AT MONROE AVENUE CHAPEL.

Larger Crowd of Visitors Than Expected —Some Had to Go Hungry—The Programme and Those Who Arranged It.

It is a very pleasant sensation to the promotors of an entertainment when there is a larger attendance than was expected and so it must have been to those in charge of the grandmothers' tea at Monroe Avenue chapel last evening when the crowd gradually grew until the plentiful supply of refreshments had disappeared and still loud rang the cry for more.

Supper was served early in the evening in the church parlors and after all was gone the crowd moved to the main room of the chapel to enjoy the varied programme provided. Then the grandmothers, in old-fashioned white caps and aprons, gathered from their tasks at kitchen, dining room and fancy table and opened the entertainment with "Auld Lang Syne." A medley was next rendered on the piano by Stephen Haff, after which Miss Alice Pugh gave a recitation entitled "Grandma's Spectacles." "Grandma and Grandpa" were represented in a tableau by Mary and Aaron Brouwer, dressed in appropriate costumes.

The recitation, "A Boy's Opinion of Grandmas," was amusingly given by Clarence Van Doren, and was followed by a duet, "Grandmother's Easy Chair," by Mary and Aaron Brouwer. Miss Lulu Randolph recited "When Grandma Was a Little Girl" and then Miss Sadie Elliot sang "Old Oaken Bucket" in a manner that charmed all her hearers and brought forth hearty applause. "Gossips" was another tableaux by the grandmothers. The vocal solo, "Coming Thro' the Rye," was delightfully rendered by Mrs. James Rogers. The next number on the programme was a reading from Carleton by J. R. Joy, after which followed the tableaux, "Aunt Sally Plunkitt," represented by Mrs. LaRue. Another selection by Mrs. Rogers and a reading by Mrs. Haff were followed by the principal part of the programme, a dialogue entitled "City and Country Hospitality." Walter McGee and Miss Charlotte Aldrich played the county uncle and aunt in a most successful manner, while their city neice and nephew were represented by Miss Georgie Beekman and Blanchard Randolph. It was the old story of the hearty welcome at the country home and the cold shoulder turned when the country relatives paid a return visit.

The parts were all excellently acted, and the audience were kept in roars of laughter especially by the actions of the country couple. The programme closed with "Home, Sweet Home," sung by the grandmothers.

The entertainment was arranged by the following committee: Mrs. Hayes, Mrs. A. S. Brouwer, Miss Mary E. Brouwer, and Mrs. Henry Pugh, and all deserve great credit for the splendid programme furnished.

The entire affair was given by the Ladies Aid Society of the church of which Mrs. La Rue is president. The supper was served by some of the members, including Mrs. A. D. Pierson, Mrs. Theodore Van Pelt, Mrs. E. E. Brown, Miss Emily Haff, Miss Lottie Aldrich, Mrs. W. J. Eakins, and Mrs. James Rogers, while Mrs. La Rue, as Aunt Sally Plunkett, sat at the head of the table and poured the tea. The kitchen was under the supervision of Mrs. Henry Pugh, Mrs. Wenzel, and Mrs. L. G. Fulton. Miss Stafford acted as cashier. The fancy table was under the charge of Mrs. Stephen Haff and Mrs. William C. Burt.

An Officer's Good Luck.

Ex-Police Sergeant Fred Hess, of Elizabeth, has just come into possession of a legacy of $12.000 by the death of a relative. GRIGGS TO LEAD THEM

Jersey Republicans Name Him for Governor.

Chosen on the Third Ballot When a Break Was Made in Several Counties—Kean and Ward Showed the Next Greatest Strength, with Voorhees Fourth in the Race.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 20.—The republican state convention held here yesterday was the largest and most enthusiastic in the party's local history. The successful candidate for the nomination, John W. Griggs, is a lawyer of Paterson. He sat for eight years in the state senate as Passaic's representative, and his career in that body was brilliant. Many laws now upon the statute books of the state were framed by him. Taylor opera house was packed with the delegates and spectators, and at times there was confusion and disorder growing out of the zeal of the followers of the men seeking the nomination, but ex-Judge Fort, who presided over the convention, managed to keep it pretty well in hand and at no time lost control of it.

How the Ballots Stood.

Griggs was nominated on the third ballot when numerous counties which had voted either wholly or in part against him went solidly over to him. The third ballot stood: Griggs, 537; Ward, 138; Kean, 123; Voorhees, 38; Toffey, 1. The first ballot stood: Voorhees, 74; Kean, 207; Griggs, 294; Ward, 168; Gardner, 23; Rogers, 76; Toffey, 1. Second ballot: Voorhees, 65; Kean, 248; Griggs, 338; Rogers, 29; Toffey, 1; Ward 166.

The Platform.

The platform reaffirms devotion to the national policy of the republican party, opposes any attempt for a debased or depreciated currency, and favors a tax upon imports sufficient to afford protection for American industries and adequate revenues. Pledges are made of numerous local reforms should the party be successful at the polls.

THE YACHT-RACING FIASCO.

Bitter Comment by Yachtsman on the Proceedings.

London, Sept. 20.—The Yachtsman prints a bitter article on the subject of the Defender-Valkyrie III. fiasco, in the course of which it says: "The New York Yacht club may be congratulated on retaining the thrice-presented and illegally held cup. Had it not been for Lord Dunraven America's cup would never have emerged from its dishonor and obscurity into which it had been plunged by the Thistle and Volunteer matches. Every British yachtsman will approve of Lord Dunraven's conduct."

Y., Sept. 20.—On the 486th ballot Hobart Krum of Schoharie county was nominated for senator by the deadlocked republican convention of the twenty-seventh district in its sixth day's session. CONDEMNED TO BE SHOT.

Chas. B. Hughes' Narrow Escape at the Hands of Spaniards.

St. Louis, Sept. 20.—Chas. S. Hughes, the poet-printer, who has been with the insurgents in Cuba, is now in St. Louis. In an interview he tells of his experience in the Cuban service last April for ten days and of his capture with nineteen others by the Spaniards. "We were condemned to be shot," he said, "on July 21. The evening of July 19 we learned of the approach of Maceo and were assured that he and his battalions would arrive in time to save us. At this time we were in a dungeon hot high enough for a man to stand in. It was filthy and unfit for a human to stay in. At midnight the rebels charged into town, cut down the guard of fifty men and rescued us. We were all given arms and joined. After defeating the Spaniards and capturing a lot of supplies, we retired to the hills."

Not a Race War.

"What is the composition of the Cuban army?" was asked. "It is not and never has been a race war. That report was false and was one of the many similar reports sent out by the army of Spain to mislead the people of the world. The Cuban army is composed of the best element of the island, planters, merchants, mechanics, etc., and about one-third of the entire army come from the United States." Continued sickness forced Hughes to return to the United States.

THE MOUNTAIN MURDERERS.

A Gang of Colored People, Including Two Women, on Trial.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 20. — The mountain murderers, James Miller, Sarah Miller, John Bird, Nelson and Hester Brace, all colored people, charged with blowing up the Hungarian boarding house with dynamite on the mountain cut off, near the Lehigh Valley railroad, have been arraigned for trial. It will be remembered that at the time the outrage was committed several people were killed and a number of others were maimed, some of them for life. Frank Shafer and George Johnson, also colored, have turned state's evidence. Shafer admitted that he pulled the battery which exploded the dynamite. The case is one of great interest in this county, as there are two women connected in the outrage whose lives are at stake.

He took the papers she presented and the next day sent to the Kansas court for all the papers connected with the case.

WITH DYNAMITE AND OIL

Another of J. D. Rockefeller's Big Barns Burned.

Numerous Explosions Heard During the Progress of the Fire—Oil Cans, Dynamite and Bags of Powder Found in the Woods—Reward for Capture of Incendiary Increased.

Tarrytown, N. Y., Sept. 20.—Early yesterday morning a fire which was of the incendiary origin destroyed the large red barn of John D. Rockefeller, which is situated on the Bedford road, near the Berkeley inn, the summer home of many prominent New York people. That the fire was the work of an incendiary, there is no doubt in the opinion of those who know the situation of the building on the Rockefeller estate. The incendiary seems to have been well acquainted with the surroundings and also quite familiar with the use of oil and dynamite. During the fire numerous explosions were heard. So fast did the fire spread that by 5 o'clock the $5,000 barn and contents, which consisted of hay, grain and farm implements, lay a mass of smoking ruins. Oil cans, dynamite and bags partially filled with powder, were found in the woods nearby. Mr. Rockefeller has authorized Superintendent Bolze to increase the reward for the capture of the culprits from $1,000 to $2,000. This second fire on the Rockefeller estate is also thought to have been caused by the disgruntled laborers, who have been working about the place and who were recently discharged.

She Was a Dowager Princess and Poor in All Save Titles.

The dowager princess was a morganatic wife and at the time of her son's marriage to the princess Beatrice she was indirectly subjected to most covert insult from many prominent English folk. The family is poor in everything except titles. At the time of his marriage the young prince was said to have had a capital of only £600. For a considerable time the Prince of Wales totally ignored his new brother-in-law, and even now, it is said, the two are on anything but friendly terms.

The shipwrecked passengers number 47 and the crew 45. The Edam was a steel steamer valued at $350,000. Her cargo was estimated to be worth $120,000.

ALL AT SEA

But Finally Rescued from Danger. Result of Taking a Friend's Advice.

There are thousands of women to-day entirely at sea, so to speak, as far as their ailments are concerned.

They are overtaken by some feniale complaint, and send for their doctor in all haste. He usually tries this and that without success; he is all at sea, and his poor patient is with him.

Suddenly a lady friend tells the sufferer to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because it has cured her.

The following letter shows the result of that trial, and is a sample of thousands of similar cases happening daily.

"I had been very sick for a long time; doctored with many prominent physicians. They pronounced my case dyspepsia, and said there was a tendency to cancer of the womb. There was a sense of fulness and weight in stomach after meals, loss of appetite, and offensive belching of wind, dizziness, 'all gone' feeling in pit of the stomach; headache, heartburn, palpitation at times, urine high colored. A lack of interest in all things.

"The doctor's medicines gave me but little relief. I was almost in despair, when a friend advised your Compound. I took it, and am now perfectly well. I can recommend it to all women. A number of my friends and neighbors have taken it on my recommendation, and have always found relief." — MRS. JAMES CRANKSHAW, Frankford, Pa.

LOSS OF BARCIZTEGUI

Details of the Sinking of the Spanish Warship.

Run Down by the Merchant Steamer Mortera at the Port of Havana. The Spanish Commander of the Naval Forces in Cuba Among the Thirty-four Persons Drowned.

Havana, Sept. 20.—The sinking of the Spanish cruiser Barciztegui with the loss of thirty-four lives has caused a feeling of sadness to pervade the Spanish troops now stationed here as a number of the soldiers had friends and acquaintances among the victims of the accident. The cruiser was run down at midnight by the incoming merchant steamer Mortera in the canal at the entrance of the port of Havana. She sank within a few minutes.

Thirty-four Men Drowned.

Admiral Parejo and thirty-three of the crew of the warship, including Capt. Ybanez and three other officers, were drowned. The remainder of the crew, 116 in number, were saved. The bodies of Admiral Parejo and Captain Ybanez were recovered. The body of the captain was horribly mutilated, the head and arms having been eaten away by sharks. One report said that forty-one lives were lost all told. The Mortera struck the cruiser on the starboard side and so badly injured her that she sank at once. The Mortera, though badly damaged, stood off to give assistance to those on boaad the Barciztegui, and with her boats saved the greater part of the crew. Owing to the good discipline on board the warship there was no panic comparatively, and this no doubt accounts for the rescue of the greater part of those on board.

Drawn Under by the Suction.

The Barciztegui was leaving port when the disaster occurred. The usual signals were exchanged between the warships and the Mortera, but at that moment the cruiser's electric lights were extinguished, when the collision took place. The sound of an explosion, which was probably the result of the concussion, was heard, and the cruiser was found to be gradually sinking. Admiral Parejo and the other officers and the greater number of the crew embarked in the boats, but the immersion of the warship was so sudden that the boats alongside were engulfed by the suction. During the disaster their was no panic on either ship. The latest report shows that the missing are as follows: Ensign, purser, doctor, first and third engineers, twelve marines, eight firemen and nine sailors.

DOES NOT CARE TO RESIGN.

Rev. Dr. Sunderland Not Anxious To Step Aside for Dr. Talmage.

Washington, Sept. 20.—Rev. Byron Sunderland, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, arrived in the city yesterday from the Catskill mountains, and stated that he would call an early meeting of his congregation to decide whether they wished to have Dr. Talmage preside over them. If a majority of the congregation should favor the Brooklyn divine then their request would be sent to the district Presbytery for approval. Dr. Sunderland (who was at one time President Cleveland's pastor) does not desire to sever his relations with the church. Some prominent members are talking of a proposition to make him and Dr. Talmage copastors.

MUST CARE FOR THEMSELVES.

Uncle Sam Will No Longer Assist the Stranded Negro Colonists.

Washington, Sept. 20.—The four hundred stranded negroes at Eagle Pass, Tex., will have to remain in that section unless they find means outside of the United States government with which to return to their homes in Alabama. It was a year ago or over that these negroes left Alabama to form a colony in Mexico. The colonization scheme failed and the negroes reached Eagle Pass on their homeward journey. They were attacked by smallpox there. The disease has now been eradicated, but the negroes appear to have become terror-stricken, for they have declined offers of good homes and fair wages on large ranches near Eagle Pass.

VISITORS ARE LEAVING

Chattanooga's Guests Departing for Home.

Yesterday Was a Great Day on the Historic Battlefield—The Sad Past in Oblivion and Blue and Gray Clasped Hands in Friendship—Monuments Dedicated.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 20.—The official and otherwise distinguished visitors who have made Chattanooga the cynosure of the whole country for the past few days, will soon disappear from the city. First to go were the Wisconsin delegation, who started last night for Atlanta to visit the exposition. The members of the congressional delegation will all, or nearly all, have gone by tonight. Attorney General Harmon and Secretaries Herbert, Wilson and Smith left this morning for Washington. They will reach there Saturday in time to attend to business. Governors Greenhalge of Massachusetts; Morton of New York, and McKinley of Ohio, each of whom are accompanied by a large party traveling by special train, will leave this afternoon after the parade. There was a reunion last night of Confederate veterans in the National Guard armory, at which several of the more prominent ones made speeches.

Reunited Under One Flag.

Yesterday's exercises will long be remembered by those who were present. After an interval of thirty-two years the Blue and Gray again met around the crescent of Snodgrass Hill on the battlefield of Chickamauga, but not as then, amid the mist and leaden hail which marked those dreadful days of 1863, making the conflict the most disastrous in its casualties to those concerned which history knows. Under one flag a reunited host devoted to the advancement and prosperity of one common country, the veteran foemen of a third of a century ago met to dedicate as a national park the ground made sacred by the blood of heroes who fought at their side.

Visitors Astir Early.

Chattanooga was early astir and all the morning the various roads to the Chickamauga field were filled with vehicles carrying would-be spectators of the dedication ceremonies. A belt line of railroads was organized for the occasion and by that agency it was made possible for the great crowd of visitors to reach the grounds. The exercises were held on an immense stand built near the observatory tower on Snodgrass Hill, the centre of the deadly opening day conflict.

Salute of Forty-four Guns.

Promptly at noon a salute of forty-four guns announced the beginning of the execution of the programme so long arranged and looked forward to. Music by the band of the Fourteenth regiment, in camp on the field followed, and at subsequent intervals it was also heard with delight. The addresses of senator and Gen. John M. Palmer of Illinois and of senator and Gen. John B. Gordon of Georgia were preceded by the singing of America by the audience and followed by Auld Lang Syne. Gen. J. S. Fullerton, chairman of the national park commission, and as such Secretary Lamont's representative charged with the duty of directing the dedicatory exercises, introduced Vice-President Stevenson, who presided in the absence of the secretary of war.

Close of the Ceremonies.

Prayer was offered by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Gailor of Tennessee. The first address was that of Gen. Palmer, who was followed by Gen. Gordon. To the strains of the band the gathering then dispersed, most of them returning to the city to attend the reunion of the federal and confederate survivors of the Army of the Tennessee to-night, but many lingered to revive, by the sight of the old places, memories of the bitter-sweet long ago.

GOVERNOR UPHAM INJURED.

Broke His Leg While Jumping from a Carriage on Lookout Mountain.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 20.—Last evening while driving over Lookout mountain Gov. Upham of Wisconsin jumped from his carriage and broke his leg. The horses became frightened and the road being precipitous the occupants of the carriage jumped, with the result stated.

J. E. MARTINE,

The man who spends six nights out of the week away from home, blames his wife because she don't raise the boys right.—Rams Horn.

The organized liquor dealers who want to go into politics in their business interest, realize that there are a great many men in the trade in New Jersey, but some of them appear to forget that there are a great many more who are out of it, says the Newark News.

Clapp & Company have the following this week on the financial outlook:

Prosperity is writ large without respect of class. It takes time to convert corn into meat and prospects into dividends. A silver statesman cannot be turned into a gold bug in a moment any more than can the silver certificates be converted into gold in large amounts. The lawyer that can win every case and the broker whose advice is always right, are yet to be born.

It is said, that the declaration of the Grand Army of the Republic at the Louisville encampment, that a pension is a "vested right," will soon be followed by a test case in a United States Court, brought for the purpose of procuring a judicial decision on that point. It will not be necessary to hunt very long for a foundation for such a suit, as there are multitudes of cases in which pensions have been cancelled or reduced. But those who institute it must be prepared for an unpleasant surprise, since it is quite possible that the Court may regard a pension as a gratuity, and as not bigger than the Government that grants it. Of course, it is not to be expected that the courts will hold that the granting of a pension bars the Government from showing that it was procured by fraud. What the people are concerned with is to interfere not with vested rights, but vested wrongs.—New York Sun.

To run a train from Jersey City to Philadelphia on the Pennsylvania railroad ninety-four miles in ninety-eight minutes is not to break a record or score such a notable triumph in fast railroading as has been achieved on the English roads and the New York Central of late, but it is to give promise of new facilities for fast travel. The run, it is understood, is not a merely experimetal one, but had behind it a well-defined purpose to decrease the running time between the two great cities. With the extensive elevation of tracks that has been done on both the lines connecting New York and the Quaker City, with the powerful new engines that both have secured, and with the many improvements that have been made in the roads, it is possible that the day of ninety-minute trains from Jersey City to Philadelphia may not be very far in the future.—Newark News.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

51 Years Improvements in Lamps.

After several months inconvenience caused by the widening of College place, which is now called West Broadway, Edward Miller & Co., 28 and 30 West Broadway, manufacturers of the famous "Miller" lamps, known everywhere as the most complete lamp in every particular now made, are again ready for business. Their store is radiant with beautiful lamps, high priced and low, but no poor ones. The improvements which make the "Miller" the very best lamp made are their own patents, and are therefore not found in other lamps. They are made in four sizes, and in over 1,000 styles suitable for any occasion. As a wedding, birthday, or holiday gift nothing could be more acceptable than an up-to-date lamp—"The Miller." See advertisement in this paper. The "Miller" oil heater is safe and will heat your rooms until time to start the furnace.

Somerville Progressive.

The steady growth of Somerville within the last five years, the population having increased 25 per cent. according to the census statistics, has led to considerable agitation for further improvement of the town by the building of additional sewers. It is only a few years ago that the town spent in the neighborhood of $25,000 in sewering certain streets in the town. It is in contemplation to sewer the new addition made under the recent act of the Legislature, which has taken in a large amount of property to the east of the town limits, going towards Finderne. At a public meeting recently held it was estimated that the new sewers would cost in the neighborhood of $23,000.

Death of John Evans.

John Evans, a former resident of this city and a foreman in The Potter Press Works a few years ago, died in Newark on Wednesday. Mr. Evans was prominently mentioned at one time by the Republicans of the Fourth ward as a candidate for the Council. His remains were taken to Norwich, Conn., by his father, where they were interred. He died of consumption and at his death weighed only 120 pounds. He was over six feet in heighth, and at one time a man of a magnificent physique.

The long-looked for melodrama of New York life has finally arrived and achieved the great success predicted for it. "The Great Diamond Robbery" by Col. E. M. Alfriend and A. C. Wheeler, (Nym Crinkle, the famous critic) produced by Managers A. M. Palmer and Edwin Knowles, is an honest attempt to make a drama of incident for the multitude. No dramatic author need be ashamed of such a task, and in this case they have done their work well.

A Plucky Woman.

Wednesday afternoon a drunken tramp went to the house occupied by John Marsden, the sewer contractor, on Park street, Westfield. Three little children were alone in the house at the time and they fled at the man's approach and left him in full possession. Mrs. Williams, who resides across the street, heard the children scream and went to the house. Without a moment's hesitation she ejected the tramp in no gentle way and was pacifying the children when their mother returned. There was not a man in the neighborhood at the time.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

SERIOUS BOLT THREATENED.

The German Republicans at Elizabeth Won't Support Griggs.

The Democrats of Elizabeth are delighted with the nomination of John W. Griggs, says The World this morning. They claim he will be an easy man to beat. Local German Republicans are in open revolt against the nominee on account of his past record on local option, and he will get a very few of their votes.

The German Liquor Dealers' Union, which comprises all the men of that nationality in the business in Elizabeth, will at its next meeting pass a resolution denouncing the action of the Republican Convention in selecting Griggs as the party's standard-bearer. It will issue an address, it is said, urging all German-Americans to vote against him on account of his radical temperance views and his former record in the Legislature on local option.

The attitude of the Germans has been threatening for the past month, so far as the Republican party is concerned, on account of its excise doings in New York and elsewhere. It took only the nomination of Griggs to make the final straw that will drive the Germans out of the Republican party.

The Republicans of Elizabeth feel sick over the fact that both of the Union county men got knocked out. The Voorhees men blame John Kean for their favorite's defeat, while the Keanites say if Voorhees had kept his fingers out of the pie all would have been well.

The only consolation Mayor Rankin, Congressman Fowler and other big shouters for Voorhees have is that their hated foe John Kean failed to gratify his ambition.

There is no doubt that the split in Union county was a large factor on determining the final result.

—The Ladies Aid Society of the Grace M. E. church will hold a social in the church this evening.

GOV. M'KINLEY TALKS

THE OHIO STATESMAN TELLS OF HIS EARLY LIFE IN THE BUCKEYE STATE

Political Matters and the Presidential Campaign Touched Upon in Gingerly Fashion. Outlook for the Tariff. Taught School at $25 a Month.

Gov. McKinley is a queer Presidential candidate. A New York Herald correspondent went from Washington to Columbus to see what he is doing to make himself President of the United States. Every one knows he is to be one of the leading Republican candidates before the Republican National Convention. Ohio has declared herself for him, and McKinley clubs are being formed all over the Union. Columbus ought to be the headquarters of the campaign.

There is nothing of the kind. The State House is as torpid as a snake in midwinter, and the Governor apparently shows no more interest in wire pulling than if he were the Chief Executive of one of the poorest Territories of the West. He is not doing a stroke to help along the movement, and he refuses to say a word upon national politics for publication. He will not talk about the Presidency, and he says his ideas on public questions are so well known that it is useless for him to make any statement to the probable platform.

Still, Governor McKinley makes a great number of public speeches. He has a fine presence upon the stump. His features are much like those of Daniel Webster. He has the same full, characteristic forehead, the same deep-set, piercing eyes looking out from under heavy brows, and his jaw is equally broad and massive. He is a finer looking man than Webster. His features are more cleanly cut, and the honesty which shines out of them was not so apparent in that greatest orator of the last generation. McKinley speaks for hours without diminution of force or repetition of ideas. He uses short sentences and makes it a principle never to speak unless he has something to say. He believes in plain Anglo-Saxon and avoids classical phrases. The correspondent says:

GOV. M'KINLEY.

During my talk with him to-day I asked him how he prepared his speeches. He replied:

"When I have an important speech to make it absorbs me. It is hard work, and it takes all there is in me. I go over the subject again and again in all its phases in my mind. I read all I can get hold of upon it, and the speech gradually grows until it is ready for delivery. If it is one that has to be given to the press I dictate it to my stenographer and see that the copy is given out beforehand. This clarifies my thought, and though I seldom make exactly the same speech that I have dictated, it is substantially the same."

"Do you like to speak?"

"No," I do not," replied Governor McKinley emphatically. "I dread it. My heart goes down into my boots whenever I get up before an audience, and I tremble until I have begun to talk. This is always so, and still I have been making speeches for twenty-three years."

"Do you remember your first public speech?" I asked.

"Yes, indeed; very well," replied the Governor, with a laugh. "It was upon my return home with the troops at the close of the war. I lived in the little village of Poland, near Youngstown, and a reception was given in honor of the soldiers. One of the judges of the county made the welcoming speech, and I was chosen to give the response. I was then just twenty-one years old."

"How old were you when you went into the army, Governor?" I asked.

"I was just seventeen," was the reply. "I was acting as a country school teacher at the time the war broke out. My father was anxious to give me a good education. He moved with his family to the little town of Poland in order that I might go into the academy there, and when I was about fifteen or sixteen he sent me to the Allegheny College at Meadville, Pa. I fell sick there and had to come home. When I became better I took up teaching and got a country school near Poland This I left to go to the army. My wages were, I think, $25 a month, and I boarded around.

"I don't know when I was not interested in the tariff. I was brought up, as it were, on protection. My boyhood was spent in an iron manufacturing district and among miners, and Canton, where I went to live, is a center of great manufacturing industries. The first speech I made in Congress was in favor of a protective tariff. It was against Fernando Wood's tariff bill in 1878. As I went on in my study of the question I became more and more convinced that this was the best way to raise our revenues and at the same time support our industries. The tariff will always be a live question."

When the Bishop of Modenstein saw this,

BY AN ACE IT MISSED HER HEAD.

hesitation and mercy passed out of his heart, and though the man had now no weapon, he thought of sparing him no more than he would have spared any cruel and savage beast; he drove his sword into his body, and the count, not being able to endure the thrust without flinching, against his own will gave way before it. Then came from his lips a loud cry of dismay and despair, for at the same moment that the sword was in him he, staggering back, fell wounded to death through the open window. The bishop looked out after him, and Princess Osra heard the sound of a great splash in the water of the moat below. For very horror she sank against the door, seeming to be held up more by the sword that had pinned her hair than by her own strength. Then came up through the window, from which the bishop still looked with a strange smile, the clatter of a hundred feet running to the gate of the castle. The bridge was let down; the confused sound of many men talking, of whispers, of shouts, and of cries of horror, mounted up through the air. For the count's men in the hall also had heard the splash, and run out to see what it was; and there they beheld the body of their master dead in the moat; and their eyes were wide open and they could hardly lay their tongues to the words as they pointed at the body and whispered to one another, very low, "The bishop has killed him—the bishop has killed him." But the bishop saw them from the window and leant out, crying:

"Yes, I have killed him. So perish all such villains!"

And when they looked up and saw in the moonlight the bishop's face, they were amazed. But he hastily drew his head in, so that they might not see him any more. For he knew that his face had been fierce, and exultant, and joyful.

Then dropping his sword, he ran across to the princess and drew the count's sword, that was wet with his own blood, out of the door, releasing the princess' hair; and seeing that she was very faint he put his arm about her and led her to the couch; and she sank down upon it, trembling and white as her white gown and murmuring, "Fearful, fearful!" and she clutched his arm and for a long while she would not let him go; and her eyes were fixed on the count's sword that lay on the floor by the entrance of the little room.

CHAPTER V.

"Courage, madame," said the bishop, softly. "All danger is past. The villain is dead, and you are with the most devoted of your servants."

"Yes, yes," she said, and pressed his arm and shivered. "Is he really dead?"

"He is dead. God have mercy upon him," said the bishop.

"And you killed him?"

"I killed him. If it were a sin, pray God forgive me!"

Up through the window still came the noise of voices and the stir of men moving; for they were recovering the body of the count from the moat; yet neither Osra nor the bishop noticed any longer what was passing; he was intent on her, and she seemed hardly yet herself; but suddenly, and before he could interpose, she threw herself off the couch and on to her knees in front of him, and, seizing hold of his hand, she kissed first the episcopal ring that he wore and then his hand. For he was both bishop and a gallant gentleman, and a kiss she gave him for each; and after she had kissed his hand he felt the tip of her eyelashes brush wet against his skin, as she bent her head over his hand. But he raised her hastily, crying to her not to kneel before him, and, throwing away his hat, he knelt before her, kissing her hand many times. She seemed now recovered from her bewilderment and terror; for, as she looked down on him kneeling, she was half-ways between tears and smiles, and with curving lips but wet, shining eyes she said very softly:

"Ah, my lord, who made a bishop of you?" And her cheeks grew in an instant from dead white into sudden red and her hand moved over his head as if she would fain have touched him with it. And she bent ever so little towards him. Yet perhaps it was nothing, and any lady who had seen how he bore himself, and knew that it was in her cause, for her honor and life, might well have done the same.

The Bishop of Modenstein made no immediate answer; his head was still bowed over her hand and after a while he kissed her hand again; and he felt her hand press his. Then suddenly, as though in alarm, she drew her hand away, and he let it go easily. But then he raised his eyes and met the glance of hers and he smiled; and Osra also smiled. For an instant they were thus. Then the bishop rose to his feet, and he stood before her with bent head and eyes that sought the ground in becoming humility.

"It is by God's infinite goodness and divine permission that I hold my sacred office," said he. "I would that I were more worthy of it! But to-day I have taken pleasure in the killing of a man."

"And in the saving of a lady, sir," she added softly, "who will ever count you among her dearest friends and the most gallant of her defenders. Is God angered at such a deed as that?"

"May he forgive all our sins," said the bishop gravely; but what other sins he had in his mind he did not say, nor did the princess ask him.

Then he gave her his arm and they two walked together down the stairs into the hall; and the bishop having forgotten altogether both his hat and his sword, was bareheaded and had no weapon in his hand. The count's men were all collected in the hall, being crowded round a table that stood by the wall; for on the table lay the body of Count Nikolas of Festenburg, and it was covered with a horse-cloth that one of the servants had thrown over it. But when the men saw the princess and the bishop, they made way for them and stood aside, bowing low as they passed.

"You bow now," said Osra. "But before, none of you would lift a finger for me. To my lord the bishop alone I owe my life; and he is a churchman, while you were free to fight for me. For my part, I do not envy your wives such husbands;" and with a most scornful air she passed between their ranks, taking great and ostentatious care not to touch one of them even with the hem of her gown. And they grew red and shuffled on their feet; and one or two swore under their breath and thanked God their wives were not shrews, being indeed very much ashamed of themselves and very uneasy at thinking what these same wives of theirs would say to them when the thing came to be known. But Osra and the bishop passed over the bridge, and he set her on his horse. The summer morning had just dawned, clear and fair, so that the sun caught her ruddy hair as she mounted in her white gown. But the bishop himself took the bridle of the horse and led it at a foot's pace down the hill and into the town.

Now by this time the news of what had chanced had run all through the town, and all the people were out in the streets, gossipping and guessing. And when they saw Princess Osra safe and sound and smiling, and the bishop in his shirt—for he had given his cloak to her—leading the horse, they broke into great cheering. The men cheered the princess, while the women thrust themselves in the front rank of the crowd, and blessed the bishop of Modenstein. But he walked with his head down and his eyes on the ground, and would not look up, even when the women cried out in great fear and admiration on seeing that his shirt was stained with his blood and with the blood of Nikolas of Festenburg that had spurted upon it. But one thing the princess heard, which sent her cheeks red again; for a buxom girl glanced merrily at her and made bold to say in a tone which the princess could not but hear:

MADAM, FAREWELL.

"By the saints, here's waste; if he were not a churchman now!" And her laughing eye travelled from the princess to him and back to the princess again.

"Shall we go a little faster?" whispered Osra, bending down to the bishop. But the girl only thought that she whispered something else, and laughed the more.

But at last they passed the town, and with a great crowd still following them came to the castle. At the gate of it the bishop stopped, and aided the princess to alight. Again he knelt and kissed her hand, saying only:

"Madame, farewell!"

"Farewell, my lord," said Osra softly; and she went hastily into the castle, while the bishop returned to his inn in the town, and though the people stood round the inn the best part of the day, calling and watching for him, he would not show himself.

In the evening of that day the king, having heard the tidings of the crime of Count Nikolas, came in furious haste with a troop of horse from Strelsau. And when he heard how Osra had played at dice with the count and, staking herself against the castle of Zenda, had won it back, he was ashamed and swore an oath that he would play dice no more, which oath he faithfully observed. And in the morning of the next day he went to Festenburg, where he flogged soundly every man who had not run away before his coming; and all the possessions of Count Nikolas he confiscated, and he pulled down the castle of Festenburg and filled up the moat that had run round its walls. Then he sent for the Bishop of Modenstein, and thanked him, offering to him all the demesne of Count Nikolas; but the bishop would not accept it nor any mark of the king's favor, not even the order of the Red Rose. Therefore the king granted the ground in which the castle stood and all the lands belonging to it to Francis of Tarlenheim, brother to the wife of Prince Henry, who built the chateau which now stands there and belongs to the same family to this day.

But the Bishop of Modenstein, having been entertained by the king with great splendor for two days, would not stay longer, but set out to pursue his journey, clad now in his ecclesiastical garments. And Princess Osra sat by her window leaning her head on her hand and watching him till the trees of the forest hid him; and when once he was on the edge of the forest, he turned his face for an instant, and looked back at her where she sat watching in the window. Then he went to Strelsau; and when he was come there, he sent immediately for his confessor, and the confessor, having heard him, laid upon him a severe penance, which he performed with great zeal, exactness and contrition. But whether the penance were for killing Count Nikolas of Festenburg (which in a layman at least would have seemed a venial sin) or for what else, who shall say?

THE END.

A COMMON CAUSE OF SICKNESS.

In Warm Weather, Nothing so Dangerous as Decayed Foods.

Every one knows, or ought to know that decayed foods are poisonous. Boards of Health seek to prevent their sale.

We now have in mind the results which follow the decay and decomposition of foods after they have been eaten, for unless digestion occurs within a reasonable time after our meals, decomposition sets in.

If dyspeptics will stop and consider for a moment some of the symptoms of their trouble, such as disagreeable breath, eructations of gas or bad taste in the mouth, they will understand that they all must come from decaying foods that ought properly to have been absorbed into the system.

Spots before the eyes, dizziness, sleeplessness, dyspeptic headaches are but a few of the effects following the absorption into the blood of poisons developed from decomposing and undigested food that lies in the stomach.

It was a recognition of this important fact that caused the Mount Lebanon Shakers to devote so much of their time to the preparation of a remedy for dyspepsia, and nothing is more efficient than the Digestive Cordial which they have recently placed on the market.

Its action is so prompt that relief frequently follows the very first dose. It restores the appetite and increases the weight. Plumpness and strength take the place of weakness and that care-worn expression which points out the dyspeptics in every community. The local druggist are now giving away interesting descriptive pamphlets.

Try a twenty-five cent bottle of Digestive Cordial and see what it will do for you.

DALE'S STRANGE DEATH.

His Body Found Floating in the Canal Near Princeton.

Trenton, Sept. 20—Coroner Bowers and County Physician Cantwell are endeavoring to clear up the mystery surrounding the death of Allen Dale, whose dead body was found yesterday in the canal near the bridge at Princeton.

Mr. Dale, who was 62 years old, had been in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad since 1871. When the body was taken from the water Coroner Bowers had it removed to the Morgue in Trenton.

There were no money or valuables on the body, but some papers were found which led to his identification.

Coroner Bowers telegraphed to the office of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Jersey City, and Civil Engineer Cooper was sent to Trenton to look at the body.

He identified the body as that of Dale. He said that Dale was employed as a clerk in the Civil Engineer's Department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and had headquarters at Reading, Pa.

AN ENTERPRISING DEALER.

Garrett Q. Packer, the Furniture Man, Ready for Fall Trade.

The thorough business man believes in supplying his customers with the best, and Garret Q. Packer, the Park avenue furniture dealer, although he is soon to move to the J. W. Jackson building which is now being erected, has a complete stock of his wares in his present store and is prepared to give his customers even better service than before. In the upholstery department he is specially furnished with all the facilities for doing excellent work, and he advises his customers to give their orders at once before the regular fall rush comes.

Although the assortment is larger than ever before, the prices will be lower as Mr. Packer does not care to go to the expense of moving his large stock to the new store unless it is necessary. The latest novelties in the trade are on exhibition and his store is a perfect paradise to the lover of dainty furniture.

Burglars in a Postoffice.

The postoffice at Ford's Corner was robbed Wednesday night. The office is in the general store of J. B. Winant. The safe was blown open with dynamite. A quantity of stamps and considerable cash was taken. In all about $129 was stolen. There is no clue to the burglars, who were without doubt professionals.

The Bicycle as an Educating Agent.

The bicycle is, in fact, the agent of health and of a wider civilization. It will give stronger bodies to the rising generation than their fathers have had, and it will bring the city and the country into closer relations than have existed since the days of the stage-coach. What the summer boarder has been doing for the abandoned farms and deserted villages of New England the wheelman is doing for the regions surrounding our great cities. He is distributing through them modern ideas and modern ways of living, and is fructifying them with gentle distillations of city wealth. Above all, he is teaching their people that a sure way to prosperity lies before them in the beautifying of the country in which they live, and in the preservation of all its attractive natural features.—Century.

Rebuked by Hannibal Hamlin.

Mr. Hamlin was a true gentleman. Punctilious himself in the observance of all the requirements of gentlemanly intercourse, he was equally exacting of every courtesy due him from others. He permitted no man to be rude to him, or to assume the attitude of a superior. On one occasion one of the able men and leaders of the Senate, distinguished for a self-conscious, lordly air in his deportment, in the change of seats which occurs once in two years in the Senate chamber had gained a seat by the side of Mr. Hamlin, and began at once to practice upon him those little exactions and annoyances which he had been accustomed to impose upon others. After a few days of yielding to these encroachments, Mr. Hamlin turned, and in a tone that did not require repetition said:

"Sir, If you expect to be treated like a gentleman you must prove yourself one."

There was never occasion afterward to repeat the admonition.—Century.

A Retraction.

An excited military-looking gentleman entered the editorial sanctum one afternoon, exclaiming:

"That notice of my death is false, sir. I will horsewhip you within an inch of your life, sir, if you don't apologize in your next issue."

The editor inserted the following next day:

"We extremely regret to announce that the paragraph which stated that Major Blazer was dead is without foundation."—Tit-Bits.

Victoria Photographed.

Mr. Downey, the royal photographer, when asked how Queen Victoria sat for her latest photograph, replied:

"Like other folks. When I had settled her I said: 'Would your Majesty put on a more favorable countenance.' She said: 'Certainly,' and put it on."

NO JOY IN GOTHAM TO-DAY.

The sun was shining yesterday on Hoboken's fair shore
And the band played sweet "Ben Bolt" and "Annie Laurie" o'er and o'er.
But there was no joy in Gotham, for the springs of mirth were dry,
And the growler ceased from rushing for it was no use to try.

There was Ginsling's on the corner and Go-easy's in the block,
But the side door never yielded to a dry and thirsty knock;
And tight shut was Always Open, for quite early in the day
The proprietor and family went sailing down the Bay.

To be sure the parks were open to the humble and the proud,
And they swarmed from early morning with a hot and famished crowd;
But the water in the fountains was a cheerless substitute
For the cool and frothy lager and the juices of the fruit.

Oh, the sun was shining yesterday on Coney Island's strand,
And the beer flowed fresh and foamy to the music of the band;
But there was no joy in Gotham for a parched and thirsty soul—
There was dry dust in the growler and a famine in the bowl!

The Terrier and the Indestructible Rat.

A rat, a terrier and a small boy caused thousands of people to congregate on West Madison street about 9 o'clock one evening last week, and it was not a real rat, either.

The rat, which was a most natural looking rubber affair, was connected with a long thin pipe and a bulb. Every time the boy squeezed the bulb the rat would leap forward in a most lifelike manner and the ladies on the street would shriek with terror and gather up their skirts. This delighted the crowd, which surged down on the boy and the rat from every direction.

The fun was kept up for an hour or more, even the policeman on the beat stopping now and then for a good laugh. Suddenly, however, a sleek looking rat terrier ran into the crowd and made for his mortal enemy. Down he pounced. The boy gave the bulb a jab and the rat leaped about six feet. Again the dog made a spring. This time he caught the rat in his teeth and the pressure caused it to give out a most life like squeak, which delighted the dog and audience alike.

By this time the street was packed. Time after time the dog would shake the rat and put it down, only to see it leap again, to the wild delight of the crowd. For the first half hour it was mere play to the plucky little terrier, but after a while things began to grow monotonous.

The dog lay down for a rest and the rat jumped over him. This was too much for canine flesh and blood to stand; he leaped up again and now the contest kept up until the dog fell to the pavement from sheer exhaustion. Panting and with eyes protruding, he made a few more ineffectual snaps at the rubber rat, then turned over on his side and laid his head on the pavement.

His owner worked his way through the crowd, picked up his pet in his arms, uttered a few remarks, and offered to lick the man that killed his dog. The crowd jeered and dispersed, while the small boy strolled down the street in search of another ambitious rat catcher.

THE FOOTBALL ENTHUSIASTS.

THE Y. M. C. A. MEMBERS FORM A LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

To Contest With the Other Teams of the Central New Jersey Football League—Officers Elected—Crack Players to Go In.

The football enthusiasm took practical shape last evening when those interested in the sport gathered together in one of the meeting rooms in the Y. M.C. A. building and organized the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. Football Association.

The meeting was called to order shortly after eight o'clock by Physical Director D. A. McPhie, and the purpose of the gathering stated. Chas. B. Morse was elected temporary chairman and Raymond A. McGee secretary pro tem.

Mr. Morse then told what had been done and read an account of the organizing meeting of the Central New Jersey Football League, and then the constitution which was adopted last night. The delegates who had attended that meeting, explained some of the positions that were not easily understood.

Then, on motion of Mr. McPhie, the association was regularly organized: The following officers were next elected: President, Charles B. Morse; Vice-president, Volney F. Green; Secretary, Edgar I. Serrell; Treasurer, D. A. McPhie; Manager, Louis Waring; Captain, George Schoonmaker. The next question to come before the meeting was that of the selection of colors and distinguishing features of the team. On motion of Arthur B. Crane it was decided to adopt a black jersey and maroon stockings as the uniform, and black and maroon as the colors.

The selection of the ground on which to play was then discussed and D. A. McPhie appointed a committee to see if suitable arrangements could be made with the Crescent Wheelman for the use of the oval. The question of practicing, when and where, was introduced and Manager Waring recommended that as much outdoor practice be taken as possible, but cautioned the players on practicing too hard at first. After a general discusion, Monday and Friday evenings were selected for practice in the gymnasium under the charge of Manager Waring.

The financial department of the association was next talked over and a number of suggestions made as to ways in which to raise the necessary funds to keep the team going. No definite action was taken, however.

The subject of practice was again referred to and Mr. Waring gave a brief description of some of the methods, but particularly advised that a tackling bag be procured. After some debate it was decided that a committee of three, consisting of George Snediker, George Schoonmaker and Thomas A. Cumming, be instructed to arrange one. The meeting then adjourned and the members stopped to talk over the proposed eleven. Many of the crack players of Plainfield were present at the meeting and several more, who were unable to be present, sent word that they wished to join. From the present outlook it appears that Plainfield is going to have a football eleven that will make a hard fight for the championship. Mr. Waring, aided by several of the other veteran players, will coach the men.

Opening of the Plainfield Art School.

The opening reception and exhibition of the models of the Plainfield Art School, at 212 West Front street, will be held on Thursday, October 3d, at 8 o'clock. At 8:30 Olaf Sangstad, will give a short talk explaining the work for the coming year.

The aim of the school will be to give most thorough instruction in these fundamental departments of the graphic arts, with a view of fitting its pupils for usefulness, as well as giving the very best preparatory work for those intending to make the arts their profession.

To Arrange for Golf.

The Hillside Tennis Club will meet on Wednesday, October 2d, to revise the constitution and bylaws so as to provide for the golf course.

John G. Mauger Editor of the Sunbeam, Seligman, Mo., who named Grover Cleveland for the Presidency in November 1882, while he was Mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says: "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as staple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

RECEPTION TO SUMMER TOURISTS.

Grace M. E. Church Gives Their First Social of the Season.

It was a warm night, but the attendance at the opening social of the season in the Grace M. E. church last evening did not seem any less crowded than usual. It was a reception to all the congregation who had been away during the summer, and was given jointly by the Ladies Aid Society and the Epworth League of the church. The Epworth League, through its entertainment committee, which consists of Miss Grace Carroll and Miss Carrie Tingley, furnished the programme, which consisted of a piano duet by Mrs. Powell and Miss Alice Carroll, a contralto solo by Miss Grace Carroll, with violin obligato by Dyckman Winckler, a recitation by Miss Ada Woolston, a bass solo by John Steiner, and a contralto solo, "Slumber Song," by Miss Alice Carroll. The selections were all well rendered, and everyone seemed highly pleased with the programme.

After the refreshment for the mind had been supplied the inner man was also provided for. At the cake table were Mrs. John Carney, Mrs. Schuck and Mrs. E. Stevens. The peaches and ice cream were under the control of Mrs. J. C. Garey and Mrs. E. Vermeule.

The decorations, which added greatly to the beauty of the room, were arranged by Mrs. W. H. Griffin, Mrs. Sheppard, Mrs. A. A. Taft, Mrs. E. Winckler and Mrs. Will Lunger, who also looked out after the general arrangements.

Those in charge of the refreshments and decorations were from the Ladies Aid Society, and all fulfilled their duties in a most satisfactory manner.

WHO OWNED THE HORSE?

Carter Thought That He Did, But the Jury Differed With Him.

The ownership of a horse sometimes becomes quite a complicated matter as shown in the case of Carter vs. Stevens, a suit in trover and conversion, tried before Justice Brandon and a jury of twelve men at Bound Brook Thursday. Mr. Stevens, the defendant, is a member of the firm of Stevens and Giles, the West Front street bakers. The cause of the suit was as follows: Mr. Watts owned a horse on which Stevens had a chattel mortgage. Watts took the horse to Carter's livery stable and there kept him until the bill for his keep exceeded the value of the horse. Carter and Watts then agreed that a man by the name of Powlinson might have the use of the horse for its keep. At last Powlinson turned the horse over to Stevens. Carter made a demand for it, but Stevens would not turn it over to anyone but Watts. The suit was then brought. After deliberating the jury brought in a verdict of no cause of action. Anderson and Voorhees, of Somerville, represented the plaintiff and S. S. Swackhamer, of this city, acted as counsel for Mr. Stevens.

ANNIE DIDN'T CARRY A BAG.

So Much Testimony in the Beekman Murder Case Retracted.

Detective Barcalow has obtained evidence which goes to show that Jacob S. Johnson, charged with the murder of Annie Beekman, did not kill Mrs. Hamilton on Long Island in 1892. He found that Johnson had lived since 1886 continuously in the neighborhood of Neshanic. Counsel for Johnson say they have a complete record of his life since his boyhood.

Calvin Corville, who paid the $68 to the Beekman woman and testified that she carried a black bag, today retracted that statement, saying that two colored women called for money Saturday, and that he got them mixed in his memory.

The case will be one of the first brought before the Grand Jury.

Irving W. Larimore, physical director of Y. M. C.A., Des Moines, Iowa, says he can conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm to athletes, gymnasts, bicyclists, football players and the profession in general for bruises, sprains and dislocations; also for soreness and stiffness of the muscles. When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

FOURTEEN WHEELS PARADE.

Bicycle Carnival at Bound Brook Not a Great Success.

The bicycle carnival at Bound Brook was postponed until last evening on account of muddy roads. And two Plainfield young men, Harry Fulper and Wyatt Barnes, who went there the other evening only to find no carnival, went again last evening. Although it was rather warm they started out in the afternoon on their wheels to go a rather roundabout way. They first went to Springfield, then to Elizabeth, Rahway, Metuchen, New Brunswick, and finished at Bound Brook at about five o'clock. Here they stopped to take dinner with a friend and then went out to see the bicycle carnival. They were greatly disappointed in it, however, for instead of the several hundred decorated wheels that they expected to see, there were twenty riders in all, of whom fourteen had their wheels decorated. Some of them were very pretty, though, while many of the decorations along the line of march, were artistic.

The prettiest designs were a large crescent hung with Chinese lanterns and a little red school house made of canvas stretched on a frame inside of which was a lantern and the wheelman. Just as this design passed the Mansion House, the front wheel of the safety struck a stone and over went school house, wheel and wheelman. The lantern ignited the canvas but the school house was saved by the bystanders before the fire department could be called.

The crowd that attended the carnival was very large, wheels and carriages flocking there from all the neighboring towns. Fulper and Barnes came home on the train after all was over.

A MUSICAL EVENING.

H. N. Spencer's Home the Scene of a Pleasant Event Last Night.

A few friends from the borough gathered at the home of Collector H. N. Spencer, on Somerset street, last evening, in honor of Fred Allen, of Delavan, Illinois, who is visiting relatives in the borough. Most of the evening was spent in singing, and at the close Mr. Spencer rendered a selection on his violin.

Among those present besices Mr. Spencer and family were Councilman W. C. Smith, Councilman and Mrs. W. A. Schutt, Herbert Schutt, Louis Schutt, Augustus Martin, Horace J. Martin, Joseph Martin, Harry Spencer, Elias Southard, Theodore Vroom, Louis Bird and Judge Brown.

Regular Meetings Resumed.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Crescent Avenue church resumed their regular Friday evening prayer meetings, last night. The meeting was in charge of Staff Captain Edith Marshall, of the Salvation Army. The subject was "An Overcoming Religion." Miss Marshall gave her personal experience of the truthfulness of an overcoming religion in her work among the slums of New York city. On Friday evening, October 4th, the society will hold their annual business meeting for the election of officers for the insuing year.

Assaulted a Comrade.

Three small lads from Pondville went for one of their comrades yesterday and gave their victim a pair of black eyes.

His mother, Mrs. Leland, complained to the police, and this morning the three pugnacious Pondville boys were brought before Judge Coddington, who severely repremanded them, and told them never to do so again unless they wanted to go to jail.

Death of Mrs. Voorhees.

Mrs. Voorhees, mother of Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, of Elizabeth, died at her home in Clinton last night. She has been an invalid for some years and at the time of the recent convention in Trenton her death was expected at any moment. Mrs. Voorhees was a faithful Christian, a devoted mother, and interested in all charitable work.

Fast Going.

Neuman Brothers' peaches are too well known to need description, but they will not last much longer. Go and see them before it is too late.

Ensign Marshall, of the Salvation Army, is the guest Major Wm. Miller, of LaGrande avenue. Last evening, previous to speaking before a large audience at the meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, she was entertained at dinner at the home of Councilman Frost. Tomorrow afternoon she will deliver an address to the Sunday-school of the Crescent Avenue church.

HART WAS TOO HILARIOUS.

AND HE WAS PROVIDED A COOLING PLACE IN THE LOCKUP.

But Before He Was Incarcerated He Gave Officer Totten a Lively Tussle—He Filled Up On Bug Juice.

A big, brawny countryman from over the mountains came yesterday to visit Plainfield. Like many of his brothers the first places of interest to visit were the saloons. His name was Frank Hart or at least such was the name given by him at the police court. He went to the Farmer's Hotel on Somerset street in the afternoon and took just enough bug juice to make him feel like fighting, when he tried to clean out the hotel, and then he started toward Front street loudly proclaiming that "No cop in this town can put me in the lockup." He wandered up to Front street and was there seen by Officer Totten, who seeing that the man was creating a disturbance, arrested him. The man struggled and Totten was forced to throw him before he could get control. Then Hart promised to behave himself and the two started toward the jail, but they had hardly gone any distance before the countryman began to feel like fighting again and struck his captor.

Again the officer had to fight to reduce his prisoner to submissiveness and made an effort to get his handcuffs on the man. The drunken man was strong and the two rolled off the sidewalk and into a mud puddle in front of Schwed's clothing store. After a lively little scrap Officer Totten put the nippers on his prisoner and escorted him to jail.

This morning Hart was brought up before Judge Coddington on the charge of being drunk and disorderly, and was given his choice of paying a fine of $5 for his fun of yesterday afternoon, or taking twenty days in the county jail to think it over.

TO HAVE ELEVATED TRACKS.

The Pennsylvania Railroad intends to elevate its tracks through New Brunswick, at an estimated cost of $2,000,000. The first step has been taken by the beginning of a four track bridge across the Raritan River.

For a long time the property owners at the New Brunswick terminus refused to make terms. The railroad instituted condemnation proceedings for the Freeman property on Water street. It is partly owned by the Consolidated Fruit Jar Company and partly by a syndicate composed of P. M. Welsh, Phillip Smith and others. The total of the awards is $55,270.50.

The Coming Lectures.

Attention is called to the valuable course of lectures advertised in another column. Mrs. Hudders and Miss Lindley are too well known in Plainfield to need an introduction. Miss Slocum delighted the Current Events Club last year with a lecture on "Social Economics." On October 8th, she will speak on "The Moral Element in Citizenship," a subject of vital interest to the community. Mrs. Livermore, the "Queen of the American Lecture Platform," will give her "Dream of Tomorrow." And the last lecture will be illustrated by the stereopticon with Prof. Gifford to explain the pictures and tell of forest conditions in New Jersey, completes a course of lectures, both instructive and entertaining.

Aunt Jemima to Entertain.

Aunt Jemima will hold a quilting party in Trinity Reformed church parlors on Thursday afternoon next from one until six o'clock, and request the pleasure of the company of all the ladies of the Christian Work Society. In the evening Uncle Obediah, assisted by Prof. Neimiah, will conduct a "Singing Skewl." There will be vocal and instrumental selections rendered by Uncle Obediah's family and guests from Donkeytown. Later in the evening Aunt Jemima will serve her friends with delicate refreshments, such as ice cream and cake.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmrcy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

THE LAST AND THE BEST.

The Fifth Open-Air Concert to Take Place Tonight.

Unless it rains or a tornado strikes the town the last of the open-air concerts will be held this evening at the corner of Watchung and LaGrande avenues, in front of the Crescent avenue church. This will be the fifth of these concerts which have proved such a feature of the summer life of Plainfield, and Councilman Frost, who took the initiatory steps in introducing them and who furnished four of them, deserves the thanks of all his fellow citizens in thus enabling them to enjoy good music and spend the evening most pleasantly.

MR. M'GILL THEIR CHOICE.

Newark Democrats Strongly Favor His Nomination.

"Chancellor McGill," said Alderman John H. Ely, of Newark, "because of his enmity to monopoly, his record and high personal character, is the logical candidate of the Democratic party. He can be elected by a large majority. Under the present circumstances I think any good Democrat could be elected, but Mr. McGill's candidacy would end in a triumph."

"Chancellor McGill is the best candate the Democrats can nominate," said George P. Powell. "The Republicans evidently think they can win with any candidate, but they are under the impression that the wave which elected them is still moving. In this they underestimate the intelligence of the voters. Money does not count in elections now, and people are ready to turn a party out as quickly as they elected them if they prove untrue. The record of the last Legislature is enough to oust the Republicans. Now we have also the personal liberty question to deal with. Mr. Griggs is on record on that question. If McGill is nominated he will get 8,000 majority in the State at least."

Reward of Waiting.

It has been remarked that "all things come about to him who waits," and among the things that are reasonably certain to come to him who waits too long to have his eyes attended to, are serious headaches and nervous disorders of varied and painful character. Why not avail yourself therefore of the opportunity for a free examination of your eyes at Collier's, 103 Perk avenue, and learn from an experienced optician whether or not you are in need of glasses.

Mayor Daly is Sour.

Mayor Daly, of Rahway, is much disappointed over the failure of his friend, John Kean, to get the nomination and is disgusted with the actions of certain prominent Republican leaders in Union county. "I never witnessed so much personal spite or bitter feeling in any delegation," said the Mayor, "as was shown against Mr. Kean by the men I refer to. With them the cry was anything to beat Kean."

Conductor Flegley Hurt.

Conductor Flegley, of a Central Railroad freight train, was struck by an overhead bridge at Roselle Wednesday night while the train was in motion. He was knocked off the car and fell beside the track. He was badly cut on the head and bruised about the body, and after being attended by Dr. Pattet was removed to his home at Mauch Chunk.

Borough Democrats, Attention.

The North Plainfield Democrats will meet in the basement of the school building this evening at eight o'clock to elect two delegates to the Democratic State convention.

The Somerset county Democratic convention will be held in Somerville on Monday, October 7th. The two districts in North Plainfield are each entitled to three delegates.

It Did Not Take.

A fairly well-dressed man presented himself to those who were sitting in front of the Hotel Grenada last evening and recited a Dutch piece. He then passed his hat, and after reaping a megre harvest, started for the North Avenue station.

HE WANTED CHEAP BREAD.

A CITY CARTMAN CHARGED WITH THE THEFT OF FLOUR.

He Was Hauling a Carload for Baker Voehl—One Barrel Missing Said to Have Been Found in His House.

One of Plainfield's prominent truckmen was arrested yesterday afternoon by Constable Moffett and Chief Grant on the charge of stealing a barrel of flour from a carload which he has been hauling for George Voehl, the West Front street baker.

Mr. Voehl received the car several days ago and yesterday when a record of the number of barrels was taken, one was missing. Voehl notified the city authorities and said that he believed the flour could be found at the cartman's. Justice Nash issued a search warrant and Constable Amos Moffett, accompanied by Chief Grant and Mr. Voehl, went to the man's home and found only his wife at home. She denied that there was any flour in their apartments, but the search was begun and the missing barrel found in a closet opening out of the next room, buried under a number of other things.

"That's mine," exclaimed Mr. Voehl, as he recognized the barrel as one of the lot that had been shipped to him.

Constable Moffett then went to the freight house, where he found the cartman, and told him that they had found the flour. The truckman, however, denied knowing that it was there. The Constable served a warrant on him and he was ordered to appear before Justice Nash at two o'clock.

The man who assisted in carting the flour was found and said that he had assisted him to carry a barrel of flour up to his rooms, supposing, of course, that it had been purchased.

Owing to the matter being settled this morning, The Press withholds the name of the man charged with the theft.

Sentence Day in Union's Court.

In the Union County Court yesterday John Henry Moore, of Summit, was sentenced to six months in the Union county jail for making improper proposals to a little girl. Guiseppe Mossetchino, of Summit, got six months in the county jail for drawing a razor on a fellow countryman. Wm. Carr and Daniel O'Donovan, of Springfield, got six months for breaking and entering a barn in Clinton township to steal apples.

Robbers at Cranford.

Thieves attempted to blow open the safes in the grocery store of J. C. Hummer and the postoffice at Cranford last night. The safe in Hummer's, after drilling, they found to be unlocked. The postoffice safe door was wrecked by the explosion, but they failed to gain an entrance. The robbers stole Mr. Irving's horse and buggy, which was found this morning tied to a post on the road near Newark.

Stereopticon Lecture.

Next Wednesday evening, in the Park Avenue Baptist church, Miss Ellie Potter, one of the workers in the Morning Star Mission House, New York, will give a stereopticon lecture illustrating the work in the slums. Miss Potter is a young woman of culture, who left a home of refinement and wealth, to engage in this work of self-denial. Public cordially invited.

Too Deeply Interested.

When the sprinkler wagon stopped in front of a hydrant near the Crescent Avenue church yesterday and began refilling, the horses started suddenly and pulled the hose out of the wagon. A number of little boys who had been watching the filling process went home soaked to the skin.

WILL MARRY NOBILITY

Miss Vanderbilt To Wed the Duke of Marlborough.

The Duke's Valet Announced the News and His Lordship Confirms It—A Big Fortune in Store for the Young Nobleman—The Nuptials To Be Celebrated This Winter.

New York, Sept. 21.—Miss Consuelo, daughter of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, has promised her hand and heart, and possibly her fortune, to the dapper young Duke of Marlborough. The announcement of this engagement was made last night at the Hotel Waldorf. The person through whom the interesting information was made public was the duke's valet. The duke attended the theatre last night, and when he returned to his hotel he was all smiles, and quite as genial as a person without a title. He greeted the reporters pleasantly, and when asked if his valet had stated the the truth, picked at his little mustache for a second and said the statement was correct. Then he said, with a little show of seriousness, that he desired the announcement should be made in this way.

As the Duke Desired.

"It is officially announced that a marriage has been arranged between the Duke of Marlborough and Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt. The engagement was arranged by Mrs. Vanderbilt's friends and those of the Duke of Marlborough. The wedding will take place toward the latter part of this year in New York." The Duke of Marlborough said he would leave to-day on a trip through the state as the guest of Sir Rivers Wilson, president of the Grand Trunk railroad.

Greatest Heiress in the World.

Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt is just 19 years old, and is the eldest child and only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt. She is one of the greatest heiresses in the world, and although she has remained with her mother during the time Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt have lived apart, there has been no estrangement between her and her father. She is tall and graceful. From her father she inherited to a large extent a love of riding, driving and other outdoor sports and is one of the most skillful woman fencers in the country. In spite of the estrangement of her father and mother she is the especial pet of each. At her marriage, therefore, it is probable that she will inherit more largely than any American woman who has ever married into the English nobility.

The Leader of Swells.

The duke is the pet of all New York swells. His actions are copied by them all. He always appears in faultless attire, and his wardrobe seems to be inexhaustible. For uniqueness of design his hats cannot be equalled on this continent, and already several fashionable dealers are taking orders for the Marlborough tiles, which they will have to make to order, as such creations were never before seen in New York. His canes, like his hats, are decided novelties. The marriage of the Duke of Marlborough to Miss Vanderbilt will connect the house of Vanderbilt to the principal ducal families of the British empire, particularly those of Buccleuh, Ruxburghe and Abercorn. The Duke of Abercorn is an uncle of the Duke of Marlborough. Of course, everybody knows that Mrs. Vanderbilt is divorced from her husband.

CROKER'S RETURN.

Jame Over To Vote and Will Go Back Before January.

New York, Sept. 21.—Richard Croker, the former leader of Tammany, who has been in England for the past six months, returned yesterday on the steamer Columbia. To a reporter he declared that he came back merely to be in time to vote the Tammany ticket, but that he would positively take no part in leading or even advising in the campaign, and that he would not attend the state convention. He said he found that there was much more enjoyment outside of politics than in it, and that he proposed to go in for the enjoyment and let politics alone. "I cannot say how long I will stay here," he said, "but I hope to return to London before the end of the year. Mrs. Croker and the younger members of the family are comfortably settled in London. My eldest son, Frank, is at Yale, and Richard, jr., was slightly injured during a cane rush at Amherst a few days ago." Mr. Croker said he had intended to lease an estate in Ireland, but found so many petty annoyances in the way that he abandoned the project. He has a breeding farm in Limerick county, Ireland.

PITTSBURG POLICE.

Charges of Blackmail and Bribery To Be Investigated.

Pittsburg, Sept. 21.—The alleged charges of blackmail and bribery made against the police department of Pittsburg are to be investigated. The mayor of this city has informed Director of Public Safety Brown, the head of the police, that he is in a position to order an investigation. Acting under these instructions the director has written a letter to one of the magistrates who preferred the charges to send him a written statement of the facts. The alleged charges were make by two city magistrates. They claimed the police received in one case $4,000 for shielding a wealthy man who was found in a disorderly house. Other charges of a similar nature were made through the newspapers. The director now wants the magistrates to prove their charges and he will dismiss the offending officials. The investigation will be open to the public.

EX-JUDGE HOLT'S WILL.

A Bitter Legal Fight Inevitable Over the Mysterious Document.

Washington, Sept. 21.—The alleged will of ex-judge advocate Joseph Holt, witnessed by president Grant and Gen. and Mrs. Sherman, which, charred as if by burning and cancellation, was mysteriously and anonymously sent to the register of wills on Aug. 26, was yesterday formally offered for probate. Upon the presentation of the paper for probate Judge Bradley passed an order making Oct. 18 the date upon which the answer of those opposed to the will is returnable. The property involved amounts to several hundred thousand dollars, a small portion of which has already been distributed to the next of kin on the supposition that Judge Holt died intestate. A bitter legal fight is inevitable. The heirs-at-law will insist upon knowing why the will was produced and the reason of its concealment.

MONTREAL IS HARD UP.

Rigorous Measures Proposed for Replenishing the Treasury.

Montreal, Sept. 21.—The financial condition of the city is in such a bad state that the aldermen are hunting in every direction for new avenues for raising money to meet current expenses. At the last meeting of the board of chairmen it was decided to tax all purely private schools, that is, those schools not under the control of the school commissioners. The meeting also favored imposing taxes on bicyclists, electric-light, telephone and telegraph poles and proposed that every resident of municipalities outside the city working in the city pay a tax not exceeding twenty-five cent a week.

He was elected to the assembly as a republican in 1879 and became famous as the father of the "Apple Barrel" bill. He assisted in the organization of the New York state agricultural society, New York board of transportation and the Buffalo board of trade.

UNIFICATION OF ITALY

A Magnificent Statue of Garibaldi Unveiled—Crispi Makes a Speech To Appease the Catholics—Only the United States and English Embassies Displayed Flags.

Rome, Sept. 21.—The buildings all over the city are literally covered with decorations, and the streets are thronged with people eager to witness the ceremonies of the series of celebrations commemorative of the entry of the Italian troops into Rome. It is noticeable, however, that only the embassies of the United States and England display flags. All the other embassies and legations abstain from any participation in the fetes whatever.

Not Aimed at the Church.

The chief event of the day was the unveiling of a monument to the memory of Garibaldi on Janiculum Hill in the presence of 50,000 wildly enthusiastic persons. King Humbert and the royal family, all of the court dignitaries and cabinet ministers and numerous deputations of veteran Garibaldians, the latter with banners and bands of music, occupied the places of honor. Premier Crispi delivered an oration eulogizing Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi as the saviors of Rome from foreign tyranny. He declared that there was no truth in the allegations that these fetes were intended to be offensive to the pope, who, as the head of the church, he said, needed no artillery to secure its existence. Signor Crispi concluded by saying that if, despite the advantages which they enjoyed, the clergy should violate the laws or vituperate the country, their punishment would be prompt and inexorable.

American Flags in the Parade.

A procession of great length marched last evening to the open space about the Porta Pia. A thousand flags were carried by the paraders. At the head of the procession marched numerous delegates from the provincial communes. Next came pupils of the military schools and delegations from the Italion colonies abroad. These were followed by various bodies of Free Masons, after which came a long line of military, political and workingmen's societies. A feature of the parade which attracted much attention was a group of American riflemen who carried Italian and American flags. The whole procession was a magnificent and imposing spectacle. As the paraders passed the Austrian embassy there was some hooting by the men in line, which was caused by the fact that the embassy, like the embassies of Russia and France, displayed no flags in honor of the occasion.

The Pope Prays in St. Peter's.

The pope went last evening to St. Peter's, where he spent an hour in prayer. His holiness will perform a similar act to-day.

ROSE BECOMES A YACHTSMAN.

The Former Horse Owner May Try for the America's Cup in '96.

London, Sept. 21.—Charles Rose, better known as C. D. Rose a notable race horse owner until 1894, but who has virtually abandoned the turf this year, recently purchased the yacht Satanita and promises to become an enthusiastic yachtsman next year. Hitherto he has not been known to have taken any interest in yachting and his new born zeal has given rise to a rumor that he intends to become a challenger for the America's Cup in '96. So far, however, the report lacks confirmation.

The Challenge Received.

New York, Sept. 21.—Another challenge has been issued for the America's cup. Ex-Commodore James D. Smith, chairman of the cup committee of the New York Yacht club, has received a cable message from Charles Rose, son of Sir John Rose of London, challenging the club to a race, to be sailed in 1896. The fact that a new challenge comes so soon is regarded as a compliment to the regatta committee of the New York Yacht club from an English source.

MAIDENHOOD.

The Young Girl's Life Like a Flowing Brook.

Its Course Obstructed by Maay Obstacles.

Some Timely Suggestions Regarding a Serious Subject.

"Brooks make rivers, rivers run to seas," sings the poet Dryden in his Worship of Aesculapius, the first known physician. The poet little thought as he penned his verse in praise of the ancient practitioner, how aptly his beautiful line would apply to the life of a woman. The chattering brook as it flows to merge itself in the larger stream represents the careless, unthinking young girl. The wild and turbulent stream, sometimes flowing smoothly, then dashing over rocks and down into unbroken depths, at last becoming a mighty river, bearing ships upon its bosom, is the woman with her broading and deepening possibilities.

But how many girls

"Standing with reluctant feet
Where the brook and river meet
Womanhood and childhood fleet"

are at this time of their lives the objects of great solicitude to their parents. The young girl is sad, does not like company, has palpitation of the heart after slight exertion, dyspepsia, constipation, pain in the head and limbs and along the spine, and her face is pale with a greenish tinge. She is the victim of green sickness. This is a case in which the nervous system is impaired and the blood is impoverished. A good tonic is need to bring her back to health and strength, and parents should be careful to choose the best remedy. Here is what Mrs. Homer Lard, of 215 Allen st., Springfield, Mass., selected for her 17 year old daughter Mary, with an account of its marvelous results:

Mrs. Lard says: "About two years ago my daughter became so nervous that I had to take her out of school. Her condition caused grave apprehension. She lost in flesh; was possessed with a nervous thirst and clutched everything on which she laid her hand, with the grip of a person in the throes of death. Worse than all, she was not only unable to sleep herself, but her restlessness would keep the other members of our family awake. She grew worse rapidly and we finally went to a physician, but the remedies he prescribed did her no good; on the contrary, Mary thought they made her worse.

"The old saying of a 'drowning man clutching at a straw' came to our minds, and remembering that I had read of some wonderful cures made by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, I decided to try it. I must say that the effect was magical, and results were apparent after the first bottle had been partly used. My daughter slept that night for the first time in months, and you can believe that to us it was like a ray of sunshine from a cloudy sky. Her condition improved steadily and she was able to resume her studies.

"Piano practice formerly had a peculiarly bad effect upon her, but she now practices regularly without becoming nervous. Two years ago we feared that Mary had reached her growth, but since taking Dr. Greene's Nervura her nervousness has been so greatly dispelled that she has grown considerably and regained the flesh she had lost."

It was wonderful what benefit this young girl derived in so short a time from Dr. Greene's Nervura, the great blood and nerve remedy. If you have a daughter who is suffering in such a manner, can you doubt that this grand medicine is just what she needs? You can make no mistake in giving her this great blood and nerve remedy, for it is the discovery of a noted and experienced physician, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City. He not only positively promises a good effect from the medicine, but allows all who wish to consult him free of charge, either personally or by letter, so that in using his remedy you make him your physician and receive the benefit of his great skill.

BIG STRIKE AVERTED

Only About a Dozen at the Crowded Meeting Who Voted To Lose Their Work—Secretary Whitehead Calls Attention to the Great Losses Sustained by Operatives Since 1893.

Fall River, Mass., Sept. 21.—After weeks of wordy agitation the Weavers' union voted almost unanimously last night not to strike for an advance of wages. The meeting was held in Music hall, which was much overcrowded. There was a great amount of noise from time to time, but the sentiment was so overwhelmingly against a strike that there was no great discussion and the meeting did not last more than thirty-five minutes. John P. Downey, one of the prominent members, made an address in which he counselled his fellow weavers not to enter into another struggle with the manufacturers at this time. Secretary Whitehead made the principal address of the evening. He presented figures showing that since 1893 Fall River operatives have lost five millions of dollars in one form or another. Among the many causes were the big strike last year, costing two millions in wages alone, two severe reductions of wages, amounting in all to about 25 per cent. of the total wages paid, and stoppage of several mills from various causes, such as depression, improvement, repairs, etc. Secretary Whitehead then asked if, in the face of the great losses, the weavers present would be willing to enter in another strike that would not only mean loss of money, but loss of much needed food and clothing. All of the secretary's talk was against striking and he gave his hearers to clearly understand that the sympathy of business men could not be with them in another fight at this time.

All Well Pleased.

A viva voce vote was then taken with the result that less than a dozen persons in the crowded hall declared themselves in favor of losing their work. News from the meeting was anxiously awaited in the city streets. Several manufacturers were about town waiting for the announcement of the result and they were very much elated at the result. There is a deep undercurrent of feeling in the city against the management of the Weavers' union for allowing the agitation to reach the stage it did last night. It has been long drawn out and has paralyzed business here for the past two weeks. More than that it has hampered the progress of the cloth market a great deal by making contracts uncertain. The general business public are well pleased that the affair has ended peacefully.

Imposing Ceremonies Over Cuba's Late Naval Commander.

Havana, Sept. 21.—The funeral of Admiral Delgado Parejo was an imposing public demonstration and showed the appreciation in which he was held as a brave officer. The procession from the chapel of the Marine hospital, in which the body of the admiral lay in state, contained all the prominent military, naval and civil personages in the city, members of the various consulates, representatives of all political parties and many prominent civilians. At the head of the procession rode Gen. Arderius, acting captain general, in the absence of Marshal Martinez de Campos. The body was conveyed on a gun carriage. Upon the arrival of the cortege at the cemetery full military honors were rendered. The body was placed in a vault in the Colon cemetery in which lies the body of the late Gens. Salmanca and Arias and Admiral Lono. While the procession was moving and during the ceremonies, salutes were fired from the forts in the vicinity of Havana. Gen. de Campos telegraphed an expression of his sorrow at the death of Admiral Parejo, and ordered that a wreath of flowers be placed upon the catafalque for him. No more bodies of those who were lost by the sinking of the cruiser have been found and it is supposed that they have been devoured by sharks.

These will be taken across the lines under cover of night. Treasury officials are also looking for the party of Chinamen sent from Vancouver to Ogdensburg, N. Y., alleged to be going to Atlanta, Ga. There are now a large number of Chinamen in this city waiting to cross the lines.

CONDITION OF TRADE

The Present Week Shows Further Improvement.

The Gains More Noticeable in Commercial and Manufacturing Lines at the East and South—Increased Demand for Iron and Steel—Bank Clearings Above the Billion Mark.

New York, Sept. 21.—Bradstreet's weekly review of the condition of business will to-day say: General trade throughout the United States shows further improvement in this the second week of September, more particularly in manufacturing and commercial lines at the east and south. From the central western and some western states, notably Iowa, there are advices that purchases of seasonable goods have been checked this week because of high temperature throughout the region specified, but in the south Atlantic, gulf and southwestern states, and on the Pacific coast, general trade has been increasing in volume with improving mercantile collections as a rule and goods selling with less effort in many instances. In support of favorable influencing conditions are this week's heavily increased total of bank clearings, the largest week's aggregate of wheat exports within three months, the heaviest week's shipments of Indian corn in seventeen months, the maintenance of full proportions of the extraordinarily heavy demand for iron and steel and the significant hardening of leading money markets, accompanied by reports of increasing mercantile discounts.

Special Features of the Week.

Among special trade features of the week are the increased demand for finished forms of iron and steel, following the check in the demand for crude; increased activity among manufacturers of clothing and cheaper grades of jewelry, and an enlarged demand for dry goods, hardware, clothing and shoes at the west, particularly Chicago and St. Louis. It should also be noted there is a prospect that whiskey production will be curtailed; demand for shoes among manufacturers is slower in starting up than expected, and the season for light-weight domestic woolens has been only from one-third to one-half of an average, owing to low prices asked for European products. Agents are asking 10 per cent. advance on spring samples of imported plain woolens and 25 per cent. advance for mohairs.

Prices Favor the Holder.

Price tendencies this week are more favorable from the point of view of the holder, advances having been recorded in wheat, corn and oats, after a prolonged reaction, wheat flour, raw and refined sugar, coffee, brown and bleached cotton goods and print cloths, in sole leather and turpentine. Quotations have held steady through the week for cotton, wool, lumber, hogs and lard, while decreases among prices for leading staples are noted for cattle, sheep, pork and coal. A special inquiry into prices for more than 100 staple products show that in the second quarter of the current calendar years there were advances in quotations for 56, no change for 17, and lower prices reached by only 28.

Bank Clearings and Failures.

Bank clearings from 74 cities this week have jumped above the billion dollar mark—$1,082,000,000. This is a gain of 10 per cent. over last week, 20 per cent. more than in the second week of September, 1894, nearly 38 per cent. larger than in the like week after the panic in 1893, and only 2.5 per cent. less than in the week in 1892, and only 9 per cent. less than in 1891 when trade was of very heavy volume. The total number of business failures throughout the United States, as reported to Bradstreet's this week is 218, against 213 last week, and as compared with 218 in the week a year ago. In the second week of September, 1893, the total was 346, and in the year prior to that date it was 174.

South Carolina now has three times as many cotton mills as it had four years ago. The capital to construct and operate them mostly comes from the north.

The aggregate of the employes of the railroads of this country is as large as the whole German army. Nine hundred thousand people work for the roads.

A lawyer in a court room may call a man a liar, scoundrel, villain, or a thief and no one makes a complaint when court adjourns. If a newspaper prints such a reflection on a man's character, says an exchange, there is a libel suit or a dead editor. This is owing to the fact that the people believe what an editor says. What the lawyer says cuts no figure.

The strange statement is made by a Philadelphia newspaper that "the oyster seems to be following the example of the peach and only to be making money for the favored ones." The idea of an oyster following the example of a peach probably never had occurred to anybody before. Oysters were in the business of setting examples long before peaches were known.—Rochester Union.

It is announced that the Supreme Court of this State has rendered a decision to the effect that a property owner who has been notified to repair a defective sidewalk can be held responsible for any injury that may befall a pedestrian by reason of his neglect. This being so, damages may be collected of owners when anybody brings suit to recover broken limbs or other injuries.

THINGS OF BEAUTY.

Thats What the Ladies Will Say at White't Opening.

An event that the ladies all look forward to with the greatest expectation is the annual fall millinery opening at White's. They all know that the hats that are displayed are the latest and choicest designs and this year Miss Daly promises that the display will excel all previous efforts. One of her most stylish creations that the writer was shown is a saucer brim of green chenille and felt braid, three inches deep in front, crown of net, with velvet draped over. The velvet is put on to form a tall loop to the left of the front and gathered at the back of this on the crown under a jet and rhinestone bar. The velvet is then gathered in, loose and full around the head, size and finished by a twist. The brim is bent up against the crown at the tall loop, a big bunch of black and white aigrette and cluster of varigated roses, are set in the wave. Another wave is bent in the brim to the right, but not close, and one on each side of the back where two very large-beaded pins secure it to the crown. This crown is made of a square of velvet, with three corners rounded, the forth corner forming the loop. The opening takes place next week, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, September 25, 26, 27.

STOLE HIS FRIEND'S COAT.

But Those Who Knew Him Discovered His Hiding Place.

Some time ago a man applied for a position as cook in John H. McVey's restaurant on North avenue, and was taken in as a roommate by Mr. McVey's chef, Louis Robinson. He disappeared with a valuable overcoat and some other property belonging to Mr. Robinson.

Yesteiday John Rickert, Mr. Neighbor and several other young men went over to New Brunswick. They stopped at the Palmer House, now run by Louis Coombs, formerly of this city, and saw the man, who had skipped with Robinson's property, employed about the hotel. The city authorities were at once notified and word was sent to Mr. Robinson, who immediately went over, arriving there at midnight. He was admitted into the room by the officers and readily identified the sleeping man as his former acquaintance. The man was arrested and brought to Plainfield to await the course of justice.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The Elizabeth Wheelmen have decided to ask for a receiver and go out of existence as a club. This extreme measure was only decided upon after long and fruitless effort to recoup their depleted treasury. President Gilbert says that the liabilities are about $1,000, and that the club has been unable to collect the dues of its members promptly and that for some time the step now taken has been imminent. The receiver will be one of the largest stockholders and an effort will be made to rejuvenate the organization after all the financial troubles are settled.

Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills.

For thirty years Dr. Deane has made a study of dyspepsia, and in thirty years has cured more cases of it than probably any other fifty physicians combined. He gave up the study of theology and took to medicine, because the most eminent physicians of that day gave him up as a chronic dyspeptic, with only a short time to live.

Result of this change—a hearty, healthy, useful life, an enormous practice, and a demand for his pills greater than for all others combined wherever known. For sale at all druggists'. Send for a free sample. White wrapper if constipated, yellow if bowels are loose.

The Kappa Delta Phi will also hold an election next week, and prepare for winter work.

Coming Attraction.

No more fascinating melodrama, or one with a better moral, has ever been presented than "The Silver King," which has for years been the sensation of London and New York. It has made fortunes for the authors and managers and has been laughed and cried at by millions of people. Carl A. Haswin, who, with his excellent company will be seen in this city in this great drama soon, is the sole owner of the American rights, and has played the leading role of Wilfred Denver over one thousand times in the United States and Canada. The entire play abounds in dramatic situations which this strong actor is abundantly equipped to present. The company which he has engaged to support him are all excellent actors and the production will be superb.

For a Better Road.

Chief Justice Beasley, of the New Jersey Supreme Court, has appointed P. Hampton Wyckoff, of New Brunswick; Mayor John G. Schenck, of Keyport, and Forman Taylor, of Colt's Neck, Monmouth county, as commissioners to condemn the three miles nearest to New Brunswick of the New Brunswick and Cranbury turnpike. The object of the condemnation is to compel the purchase of the road by the county and the making of it a public thoroughfare.

Foolish Boys.

Some boys playing along the railroad track between Graceland and Westfield yesterday found a signal torpedo. They were anxious to see what was in it, so they threw it into into a fire in which they were roasting some potatoes, to melt the solder, so they said. The torpedo exploded and scattered the fire and potatoes in all directions. One of the boys was cut on the leg by a flying piece of the torpedo case.

Hay Wagon Upsets.

A hay wagon, drawn by a pair of mules, belonging to Mr. Baldwin, of West Fourth street, came to grief in front of the residence of Mr. King on West Front street last evening, and blocked up what room had been left by the sewer contractors. The body of the wagon lay in the street while the hay was spread over the sidewalk. Lights were arranged so as to prevent any further accident.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Here's a good one which is floating around: "It is said that the King of Belgium is such an enthusiastic wheelman that he has issued an edict, to the effect that the new postage stamps shall be adorned with portraits of Houben and Protin, the famous professional bicycle riders."—American Wheelman.

"I don't look for any reduction in price for the high-grade wheels for next year," said a manufacturer yesterday. "We will have to pay more for our tubing and more for tires than we did this year, and good tubing in sufficient quantities will be hard to get. I believe that the average tubing on '95 models will be about one inch in diameter. I hear a great deal about 1¼-inch tubing, but I don't believe it will be general."

The telegraph and telephone poles are landmarks which are often of great aid to the bicyclist who is on a tour. The lines of wire usually skirt the main thoroughfares, and many journeys between fairly large centres of population can be made without danger of losing the way, if these poles are followed. This advice may seem superfluous to some old cyclists, but more than one novice has floundered into difficulties because he didn't know about it.

The bicycle craze has had, among other curious effects, an influence upon the dress of the shop girls of Paris, who have not the time to ride, but who have adopted the bloomer, or knee breeches fashion, and may be seen every day modestly and industriously attending to their duties in the shops. When evening comes they may be seen strolling home with their hands in their trousers pockets, or astride the wooden horses on the merry-go-rounds on the Boulevard de Clichy.—American Wheelman.

A Bureau of Social Requirements.

"A Bureau of Social Requirements" is the sign on the doorway of a neat office in an uptown street in New York. The young woman who offers her services in this phraseology is able to take charge of any social function, from a dinner to the most elaborate evening entertainment; she engages the caterer, supervises the floral decorations, and, in fact, takes all care and responsibility from the hostess; and belonging, as she does, in a fashionable set, she is qualified to do it all in the most approved manner.

Not every girl could take reverses so bravely nor turn her social knowledge and talents to such immediate and practical use. And here is just where character shows itself; having recognized the talent within ourselves, and found the opportunity to exercise it, we should make the most of that opportunity, and never stop to consider whether or not the work will degrade us in the eyes of our acquaintances. No good and honest work for which one is fitted is ever degrading; and when a woman really believes this she will succeed, and not before.—From "Opportunities for Women," in Demorest's Magazine for October.

Do You Play?

What is more delightful than the clear notes of the mandolin or the twanging of the banjo? To become an expert player on either of these instruments requires years of practice but to those who know nothing of the art, or have just begun studying, Miss Claribel Jeffrey, teacher of mandolin, guitar and banjo playing, offers unequalled inducements. She had a large class in Plainfield last year and all who took of her were completely satisfied with the results. Further information regarding lessons and terms may be had by inquiring at 322 West Front street.

BYRNES' SUCCESSOR.

NEW YORK'S HEAD DETECTIVE O'BRIEN'S THEORY OF THIEVERY.

Gotham no Longer an Asylum. Other Towns May Hope to Get From Here Malefactors Whom They Particularly Want.

The New York World says: In the midst of all the excise rumpus, it is well to remember that we have a new boss detective. O'Brien is his name and these are some facts about him. They are gratifying on the whole.

He never bought or sold a share of stock in his life. He never made any sort of Wall street deal in his life. He would not know how. He knows no one on Wall street and no one knows him.

He never drinks and never smokes.

He was born and brought up in New York.

His front name is Stephen. When he was a small boy he used to watch the ladies and gentleman get out of the Black Maria, and try to remember their faces. He studied the three card monte men at Coney Island and could point them out to young admiring friends.

He is not rich. He does not expect to become rich. He owns no flats, no fast horses, no farms, no boats.

He says that he would not feel that he could justly devote himself to the especial service of a Gould or any other very rich man, in return for private pay while drawing his salary from the city.

He is a moderately young man, with his hair brushed up off his forehead. He has a good chin, which Byrnes had not, but his eyes are a little too close together. Byrnes had not that defect.

He dresses with care, and does not wear thick soled boots. This is wonderful for a detective. Almost all detectives wear very thick soles, so that criminals may know them on sight.

He is very immaculate as to linen, and wears a very small diamond in a flat gold button. This he uses as a single shirt stud. His evident enjoyment of this very small diamond proves that he is a man who has not used his place to accumulate the price of many big diamonds.

His eyes are not blue enough to be very good, but they are bright and piercing.

He declares that he means to give individual detectives credit for their individual work, and not to claim all the credit himself. This programme, if carried out, will be a great change in New York detective methods. It should help the tone of the whole force.

Mr. O'Brien has one great and natural pride. But you can have ten guesses and not guess what makes him proud.

He is proud because he has to his credit 1,000 years of sentences. That means that criminals captured by him have been sentenced in all to a thousand years of imprisonment. He reflects occasionally that he is a very young man. Then he remembers that criminals of all shapes and sizes are doing and have done a thousand years of prison work, thanks to his efforts, and his bosom swells with honest pride.

In his most melancholy moments this thought cheers him and spurs him on. Of course there is a fly in his ointment and a crumpled leaf in his bed. He grinds his teeth occasionally when he thinks of the suspended sentences hanging over the heads of some of those whom he has convicted.

If those sentences had been enforced instead of being suspended his total would be far and far above a thousand years.

Mr. O'Brien is not the character that Thomas Byrnes was as boss detective. He may acquire Mr. Byrnes's charm of manner and of diction, but now he lacks both. Mr. Byrnes beyond all question was a very strong personality. He had imagination and character of his kind. He was a man for a novel. He was a born playwright. He had a certain presence very effective with criminals and women and very young reporters. But he was not the ideal boss detective. I believe that O'Brien has a chance to do better than Byrnes, although he is not naturally as much of a man. When an individual has a strong personality and an egotism out of proportion to his ability to carry around, they unfit him for such detailed executive work as is demanded in detective service.

O'Brien has not the slightest notion of the art of coining phrases or of constructing situations. If his men caught an Anarchist of the Most type, he would not at once see, as Mr. Byrnes saw, the dramatic value of saying that he was caught under the bed.

O'Brien is a simple type of the young New York man, a representative of the good class of young New York policemen. He looks upon criminals as a perfectly natural element in society's make-up.

One Bright Spot.

Rev. Howler Lou.—Is it true that you fainted in your husband's arms just after your wedding ceremony?

Mrs. Coldcash—Yes, and that's the only time in his life he ever supported me.

Cruel.

Arthur—Don't you know, Miss Sharp, I'm thinking of getting a bicycle; what do you think of the idea?

Kate—Oh, do it by all means, Mr. Softcroft; the bicycle, they say, is an excellent thing for the development of calves.—Boston Transcript.

A wealthy Birmingham man, who made most of his fortune manufacturing idols for the people in India to use in worship, is going to give a handsome sum of money, after his death, to help the missionaries in India make war against idol worhip.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

GREAT RAILROADING

A BRITISH TRAIN RUNS 540 MILES IN 512 MINUTES.

This is the Fastest for That Distance Ever Made, but It Doesn't Begin to Equal Our Record for Somewhat Shorter Runs. Our Own Remarkable Feats.

England is enjoying the spectacle of a great railroad speed contest between the roads that run from London to Aberdeen, Scotland. The contest has been on a month. The east route is eight miles shorter than the west route, and the west route, to get the travel, has been compelled to make up the difference in length by extra speed. Every time it did that the east route has chipped off another fifteen minutes, until the average speed got to be about fifty-two miles an hour. Then it was thought the limit was reached. The railroads have expended a mint of money and everybody was excited about it. The western system has succeeded in lowering the record for the 540-mile run more than an hour, having made it in twenty-eight minutes less than nine hours.

If these figures are correct, the trip of the new train is the fastest for that distance not only in England but in America, though it doesn't come anywhere near equaling the American record for shorter runs. The best long distance run in the country was made in 1891 over the New York Central. The train consisted of engine No. 870, weight 200,000 pounds; New York Central private car No. 247, weight 88,500 pounds; Wagner Palace Car Company's private car Traveler, weight 77,900 pounds, and Mariquita, weight 93,000 pounds—total weight of train, 230 tons, or 460,000 pounds, about equal in weight to an ordinary passenger train of five cars. The run from New York to Albany, 143 miles, which was made without a stop, occupied 140 minutes. The distance from Albany to Syracuse, 148 miles, was covered in 146 minutes, and that from Syracuse to East Buffalo, 146 miles, in 147 minutes and 34 seconds.

The change of engines at Albany required 3 minutes and 38 seconds, the change at Syracuse 2 minutes and 58 seconds, and a hot journal at Fairport occasioned a delay of 7 minutes and 50 seconds. The gross time of the trip from New York to East Buffalo—436 1-2 miles—was 439 1-2 minutes, including all stops, while the actual running time, exclusive of stops, was 425 minutes and 44 seconds for the 436 1-2 miles.

Changes of engines were made at Albany and Syracuse in the same manner as is done with all through passenger trains on the New York Central.

Between Yonkers and Oscawana the speed of the train varied from 65.77 to 68.24 miles an hour. Between Garrisons and Poughkeepsie the slowest mile was made at the rate of 63.49 miles an hour, and the fastest at the rate of 72 miles an hour. Between Rhinecliff and Hudson the rate varied from 63.32 to 71 miles an hour. The run of 143 miles between Albany and New York was made at the average rate of 62.11 miles an hour. Between Albany and Syracuse the train made part of the run at the rate of 69.72 miles an hour, and between Syracuse and Buffalo 72 miles an hour was the average for several miles.

The Empire State Express, which is the fastest regular long distance train in the world, has traveled once at the rate of 112 miles an hour for five miles and several times at the rate of 100 miles an hour for the same distance. The development of railroad speed has been remarkable in the last ten years. Ten years ago a mile a minute was next to lightning swiftness. A mile a minute is made daily now on several roads. The Empire State Express reels off mile after mile in 45 to 55 seconds. On the Jersey Central trains are run frequently at the rate of 87 and 90 miles an hour. A Sun reporter rode on a train from Plainfield to Jersey City, 23 miles, in 20 minutes, about a month ago.

There is no stretch of 540 miles in this country like the run from Euston Station to Aberdeen, therefore it is hard to make comparison. The longest runs in the world are between this city and San Francisco, a distance of 3,346 miles. The fastest time on this route was the Jarrett-Palmer special. In June, 1886, it made the remarkable time of 3 days 7 hours 39 minutes and 16 seconds. This is at the rate of 43 and a fraction miles an hour for the entire distance, and it included stops which in the aggregate amounted to several hours. The actual running rate was nearly 50 miles an hour.

This is the most remarkable run ever made in the world. No other train has approached it within five hours. Other remarkable runs over the same route are John W. Mackay and party, 4 days 12 hours and 54 minutes; James L. Flood and party, 4 days 12 hours and 37 minutes; Herman Oelrichs and party, four days 16 hours and 30 minutes, and Baron von Schroeder and party, 4 days 16 hours and 13 minutes. The New York and Chicago limited, a train weighing 515,700 pounds, has traveled the 440 miles between Buffalo and New York in 8 hours and 34 minutes.

The fastest short runs in this country are made between New York, Baltimore and Washington, on the Royal Blue Line. The 11:30 train has on several occasions made the 226 miles in 260 to 265 minutes, including stops. The Pennsylvania Railroad has run a 242,300-pound train from Jacksonville to Washington, a distance of 789 miles, in 15 hours 39 minutes, including thirty-four stops. This is at the rate of 53.29 miles an hour, and between New York and Washington in 4 hours and 11 minutes.—New York Sun.

BROKE BOTH LEGS.

A Frightened Horse Upsets the Colored Boy in Front of Laire's Store.

A little colored boy, who was holding a horse in front of J. P. Laire's hardware store this morning had both legs broken by the horse who became frightened and tried to run away.

A horse attached to a wagon belonging to Henry Gaston, of Dunellen, was tied to the iron image of a little colored boy which has held horses in front of Laire's store for several years, when a passing trolley car and a United States Express Company's wagon frightened the horse and he began dancing about in a very lively manner. In one of his jumps he put to much strain on the colored boy, who fell over directly in front of the horse. This frightened the animal and he became very violent, as when he backed off, the image followed, attached to his halter. Charles Bock, who had been standing near, stepped up and cut the halter, after which the horse soon quieted down. But the owner evidently did not know a good thing when he saw it, as he said to Mr. Bock when the horse became finally quieted, "I don't see what you wanted to cut the halter for."

Opeying Orders.

Here is a good story which the boys in camp will appreciate, told the other evening at the Army and Navy Club. It illustrates an Irishman's disposition to carry out his orders.

Hugh Mc——, a son of the Emerald Isle, who had volunteered in the 6th Regiment of South Carolina Infantry, was stationed on the beach of Sullivan's Island, with strict orders to walk between two points, and to let no one pass without the countersign, and that to be communicated only in a whisper.

Two hours afterward the corporal with the relief discovered by the moonlight, Hugh, up to his waist in water, the tide having set in since he was posted.

"Who goes there?"

"Relief."

"Halt, relief. Advance, Corporal, and give the countersign."

Corporal—I am not going in there to be drowned. Come out here and let me relieve you.

Hugh—Divil a bit! The Lieutenant tould me not to lave me post.

Coaporal—Well, then, I will leave you in the water all night (going away as he spoke).

Hugh—Halt! I'll put a hole in ye if ye pass without the countersign. Them's me orders from the leftenant. (Cocking and levelling his gun).

Corporal—Confound you, everybody will hear it if I bawl it out to you.

Hugh—Yes, me darling, and the leftenant said it must be given in a whisper. In with yé, me finger's on the trigger and me gun may go off in a hurry.

The corporal had to yield to the force of the argument and wade to the faithful sentinel, who exclaimed:

"Be jabers, it's well ye've come. The bloody tide has a most drowned me."—Washington Post.

The Worth of His Work.

There was one occasion when Mr. Forrest received from one of the supernumeraries of a theater a reply that seemed to satisfy him. It was the man's duty to simply say, "The enemy is upon us," which he uttered at rehearsal in a poor, whinning way.

"Can't you say it better than that?" shouted Forrest. "Repeat it as I do," and he gave the words with all the force and richness of his magnificent voice.

"If I could say it like that," replied the man, "I wouldn't be working for 15 shillings a week."

"Is that all you get?"

"Yes."

"Well then, say it as you please."—Tid-Bits.

On His Return.

Mother—If you wanted to go fishing, why didn't you ask me instead of running off and going?

Johnnie (from experience)—Because I wanted to go fishin'.—Detroit Free Press.

Crime is a queer affair. If you commit a small one you are a contemptible creature, but a big one excites the curiosity of the people, if not their admiration. Steal a loaf, and you go to prison; steal a railroad, and you can run for Congress.

TORTURED THIRTY YEARS

An Octogenarian Tells a Wonderful Story of His Remarkable Cure.

John L. Gill, residing at 34 North Grant avenue, Columbus, O., aged 88 years, says: "I suffered from rheumatism for over 30 years. The pains were very severe and often I was unable to move around. I have doctored with many physicians and taken all kinds of patent medicine, but never received any relief until I began using Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. Within twelve hours after taking the first dose I was free from pain and am now completely cured."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. STRANGELY REUNITED.

Mr. Sammons and His Finger Get Together After Nearly 32 Years.

John Sammons is a responsible man, a good farmer, who stands high among his neighbors, and whose reliability has never been brought into question. He was a brave soldier of the Confederate army, and was one of those who participated in that bloody tragedy on the banks of Chickamauga Creek on the 18th of September, 1863.

During the hottest of the engagement Sammons found himself in an exposed position, with shot and shell playing high revel around him, and he sought such shelter as was afforded by a large oak tree which was in direct line of fire. While handling his piece a bullet struck his gunstock and cut off the two first joints of the forefinger of his right hand as clean as a knife would have done it.

The dismembered finger dropped among the leaves, and as he was more particular about saving the balance of his body than about rescuing as little a thing as a missing finger, he made the best of his way out of the fight, stanching his bleeding hand as best he could.

The war was fought to a finish and Sammons came back home and went to work, charging up his maimed hand to the losses of the Confederacy. Some time ago he decided to revisit the battlefield, which he had not seen in nearly thirty-two years, and so he betook himself to Chickamauga and started to stroll over the battlefield.

The tree where he stood when wounded occupied such a conspicuous position that he found little difficulty in locating it, with all the scars and knots on its rugged trunk caused by the flying missiles of death. Having found the tree he put himself in the same position in which he was standing when wounded, and then it occurred to him to look for the bones of his missing finger. Scratching around among the leaves, much to his astonishment, he found the bones where the finger had fallen, and they corresponded exactly with the finger he had lost. They had lain there undisturbed ever since that dread day, and it was with a strange feeling that he took them, and after establishing their identity to his perfect satisfaction, wrapped them up and took them away with him as a strange souvenir of his war-time experiences. Mr. Sammons has them in his possession now, and will preserve them as an evidence of the fact that he found them on the battlefield after the lapse of so many years.—Atlanta Constitution.

Gen. Grant in Japanese Eyes.

In the July Century is printed a translation of portions of a quaint Japanese Life of Gen. Grant. The following is an extract from it:

In the spring of his sixteenth year he expressed a great thought to his father, and addressed him, saying: "I have in my mind the thought that, when four years from to-day have passed, I shall not be doing this kind of labor." The father, thinking it a strange thing, said: "Do you hate your father's hereditary trade? Do you hate to become a leather-maker, and spend your life thus? What profession, then, do you expect to adopt in future? Do you expect to go into the fields carrying a sickle and a hoe? Do you expect to buy and sell things in the market? Or do you fix your eyeballs upon books of 10,000 volumes, and desire to speculate reasons and promote moralities, and become a man of wide knowledge?" Gurando Kuen, replying to these questions, said: "To cultivate the fields and become a farmer is well, but to spend the whole life as a hireling is not well. To take a Soroban (counting machine) and become a merchant and gain profit is well, but along with it to make bad practice is not my desire. Contrary to all this, our ancestors in the war of independence of this country, sowed great merit, I hear. I also, entering a military school, will have to show my arm in the time of great things. O, Father Kuen, how is it?" The father, being exceedingly glad, did as he wished.

LAST PUBLIC OPEN-AIR CONCERT HELD SATURDAY NIGHT.

A Great Crowd Thronged All the Streets About Franklin Square—Few Decorations—All Anxious to Have Them Next Year.

By far the largest crowd that has attended any of the open air concerts thronged about the intersection of LaGrande, Watchung, and Crescent avenues Saturday evening to listen to the last of the series of open air concerts, which Councilman Frost has been entertaining the residents of the Second ward and incidently furnishing an evening of pleasure to the whole city. The high temperature reminded everyone that the heat of summer was not quite over, and in consequence, white dresses and summer suits were in the majority. The edges of all the streets surrounding the square were two and three deep with spectators, while the uneasy ones circulated around the sidewalks and kept up a continual movement about the square. The streets leading to the square had their share of people who leaned against trees or sat on the piles of sewer pipe that were present in some places.

And everybody was there, from the Boulevard girl and her beau, to the daintily arrayed maiden of society and the accompanying swell in white duck pants and stiff shirt and collar. The piazzas of the surrounding residences were thronged with friends who preferred to sit and swelter than stand up and do it. There were old grey headed men in the crowd and little children too, while even a few babies were present. Altogether Plainfield turned out as she never did before, and if those who came Saturday evening have anything to say about it, the open air concert will be an assured thing next summer.

The decorations were not at all prominent, Dr. E. W. Hedges being the only one that decorated to any extent, but that may be accounted for by the fact that notice that the concert would be held in the square was only given two days beforehand.

Shortly after eight o'clock an incident occurred that caused quite a little excitement for a few moments. During the intermission between two of the selections the sound of the fire-alarm started the assemblage. There was a general hush when the whistle first blew two and stopped. Then followed seven, and most of the men and boys in the crowd made a mad rush up Watchung avenue in the direction of box 27, which is located at the corner of Watchung and Kensington avenues.

All was excitement and that was heightened when No. 1 engine rounded the corner from La Grande avenue into Watchung avenue, with its horses on a gallop. The running men and horses and the loud clang of the warning bells on the fire apparatus made the scene a wierd one.

The selections were all well rendered, while "The Forge in the Forest" brought forth loud applause and was rendered again. A special feature in this selection was the burning of red fire. These concerts have taught the people of Plainfield that they have a band which they may be proud of. And Plainfield may also learn from the concerts that she has some public-spirited citizens.

The Daily Press learns from a number of residents that they would gladly subscribe for a series of concerts next seasan.

AN EVENING OF STORY TELLING.

D. E. Titsworth Entertains His Masculine Friends With Music, Etc.

A very enjoyable stag party was given Saturday evening by David E. Titsworth at the residence of Charles Potter, of West Seventh street. Mrs. D. E. Titsworth entertained the men with vocal and instrumental music, while Mr. Titsworth also sang several selections. A dainty supper was served at about 9:30 o'clock, and the evening was spent very enjoyably by all. Story telling was one of the features of the evening's fun, and each tried to excel his neighbor in yarns. There were fish stories, Jew stories, Irish stories, Negro stories and stories on every subject. Mr. Titsworth was especially entertaining in his dialect stories.

Among those present were Frederick Dunham, Frank H. Hartwell, Asa Randolph, Robert Randolph, Henry M. Maxson, Charles Randolph, Frank Randolph, Arthur J. Spicer, Sydney R. Titsworth, Clarence Rogers, Nathan Lewis, Wm. M. Stillman, George Wooden, Frank J. Hubbard, Marc L. Clawson, Charles P. Titsworth.

ANNIE BEEKMAN'S HAT FOUND.

The Case Against Johnson Thought to Have Been Strengthened.

The sailor hat which Annie Beekman wore last Saturday night week was found yesterday by some boys in a clump of bushes east of the river bridge at Somerville, a quarter of a mile from the scene of her murder.

Detective Barcalow thinks that the finding of the hat in that place is a very important clue, indicating that the murderer retraced his steps to the main road and crossed the bridge. This would naturally strengthen the case against Johnson, who would go to his home that way. The pocketbook is still missing, but the officers think they are in a fair way to get it.

Wedding Bells.

A very pretty wedding took place Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Martin, 617 LaGrande avenue, when Miss Mary C. Sutphen was united in marriage to John C. Hafner, by Rev. J. W. Richardson, of the Park Avenue Baptist church. Miss Fredrika Hafner, sister of the groom, was bridemaid, and G. S. Martin, brother-in-law of the bride, was best man. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present. Mr. and Mrs. Hafner will reside in this city.

Real Estate Transfers.

The New Jersey Contractor last week recorded the following real estate transfers from Plainfield:

William Cartright to John H. Kitchen, lot, Plainfield avenue, $355.

Wm. G. Demeza to Ellen Banks, lot, Netherwood avenue, $1.

Around the World on a Tricycle.

John B. Thomas, a cripple, who claims to be on a trip around the work on a wager, passed through this city Saturday afternoon. By the terms of the wager he is compelled to propel himself all the way, except when it is necessary to use a vessel, on an odd little three-wheeled tricycle which he uses to get over the ground. He expects to finish his trip in 1897 and have made $200 on the way, besides paying his expenses and accepting no gifts. From Plainfield he went to Newark and then to New York, where he will sail next week for Europe.

A Fact.

Central Railroad Detective Charles W. Dodd is as good a shot with a gun as he is a detective. A few days ago he was snipe shooting near Barnegat and fired a charge into a flock of surf birds on the wing. He killed 43 with the one shot. A fact.

The Fifth Anniversary.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the South Plainfield Baptist church will hold its fifth anniversary on next Sunday evening at 7:30. An invitation has been extended to all the societies of this city.

Ensign Marshall, of the Salvation Army, is the guest Major Wm. Miller, of LaGrande avenue. Last evening, previous to speaking before a large audience at the meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, she was entertained at dinner at the home of Councilman Frost. Tomorrow afternoon she will deliver an address to the Sunday-school of the Crescent Avenue church.

RALLYING IN THE HEAT.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS GET READY FOR ACTIVE WORK FOR THE WINTER.

Musical Programmes and Other Instructive Exercises in the Crescent Avenue and Congregational Churches.

Yesterday was rallying day of the Sunday-school of the Congregational church, but the warm weather kept kept many at home, and the attendance was not as large as it otherwise would have been. Those who did brave the extreme heat, however, attended a most enjoyable service, in which beautiful music played a prominent part. The exercises were held in the afternoon, and until next summer the Sunday-school will continue to meet at 2:45 o'clock.

The first selection was an instrumental trio rendered by Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist, Mrs. M. E. Dwight, pianist, and P. Ludwig Conde, violinist, entitled "Prelude du Deluge," by Saint-Saeus and was excellently rendered. Another selection, "Harfin Arie," by Handel, was given by the trio during the services. There was also a solo by Miss M. G. Morse, entitled, "Do Ye Right and Fear Not," by J. R. Thomas. The address of the afternoon was made by Rev. C. E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, and he talked about Sunday-schools. He told the use of Sunday-schols and how they originated. And spoke on what the teachers should do and what they should be. The ministers, he said, preach to the older people, while the Sunday-schools are especially for the young, and the children are easily influenced, and, therefore, what a responsible position, he said, that of the teacher is. He closed with a few words of exhortation to the scholars themselves, urging them to pay good attention, to listen carefully and to be eager to learn of God's Word.

The music for the singinging was furnished by Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist, Mrs. M. E. Dwight, pianist, P. Ludwig Conde, violinist, and Lyman R. Allen, flageoletist. The singing was in charge of Horace J. Martin.

Notwithstanding the hot weather of yesterday afternoon the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church was crowded with bright and happy faces of both young and old people who had met to rally around the standard of the cross and to consecrate themselves to the work of the Sabbath school. The service commenced with a trio composed of Elmer Runyon, of this city, Miss Banta, and Mr. Charles Lewir, of New York City.

After the scripture reading and prayer by the superintendent the school and their friends listened to some cordial words of greeting from the pastor, William R. Richards, D. D. Miss Hardenbergh, of New York city, who is the alto of the choir, then favored the school with a selection. Staff Captain Edith Marshall, of the Salvation Army addressed the school with some very interesting words illustrative of the work of the army among the children who dwell in the filth and evil of the great cities. Miss Marshall told touching stories of the misery of the poor and gave many illustrations of the grand work the army is doing for the better in the slums in many of the great cities.

After a few remarks by Mr. Murray the school joined in singing the old hymn "Blest be the tie that binds." The school was then dismissed by Dr. Richards.

A Fox Hunt.

A fox chase is down to take place next Friday afternoon. The fox will be released from Campbell's Road House on Park avenue at twelve o'clock, and soon after that the hunters will start. The hunt is gotten up by William Beekman, Frank Day, and Ed Campbell, and all their friends are invited to enter and bring their hounds for the chase.

Said He Didn't Steal Any Overcoat.

The colored man, that was said to have stolen the coat belonging to Chef Robinson, of McVey's restaurant, was brought before Justice Nash on Saturday evening and discharged for want of evidence. He was represented by J. P. Powers. Robinson's counsel was George W. DeMeza.

Irving W. Larimore, physical director of Y. M. C. A., Des Moines, Iowa, says he can conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm to athletes, gymnasts, bicyclists, football players and the profession in general for bruises, sprains and dislocations; also for soreness and stiffness of the muscles. When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

A DOUBLE QUARTETTE.

EIGHT CULPRITS APPEAR BEFORE JUDGE CODDINGTON TODAY.

Drunkenness is the Charge Against All—Two Enjoy a Scrap, While One Uses Her Tongue and Goes to Jail—Old Offenders.

The warm weather of the last two days has seemed to have its effect on the liquor drinkers of this city, for yesterday four drunks appeared before Judge Coddington, and this morning four more were present in the city court.

The first of yesterday's batch was John Morrisey, who paid a fine of $3 for his fun Saturday evening. Charles Callahan and Thomas Hammel drank a little too much Saturday evening and engaged in a friendly bout on East Front street about eight o'clock. The scrap began to get rather serious when Officer Cooney and Special Officer Carney appeared on the scene and quickly parsuaded the combatants that the lockup was the best place for them. The next morning they each paid a fine of $10 for their scrap. The last of Sunday's offenders was Johanna Haley, who had been staying at the home of Frank Hollenbeck, of North avenue. She was drunk and became so abusive that an officer was called and she was taken to jail. Judge Coddington gave her the choice between a fine of $20 or sixty day with Sheriff Kyte at Elizabeth. She had not the funds, so she was sent to visit the Sheriff.

The first to come before the Judge this morning were two Italians, Jose Sullivan and Vito Boyinno, who were acting in a rather hilarious manner near their camp at Netherwood yesterday evening. They paid their fines of $3 and departed.

Michael Donco was charged with being drunk on the street yesterday and was left to decide between a fine of $10 or thirty days imprisonment at Elizabeth. The last of today's batch was Richard Caldwell. He had been making Liberty street rather lively yesterday and his fun cost him $10.

MAY BRING SEVENTEEN ACTIONS.

Eighteen Carpenters Awaiting the Result of a Suit Now on Trial.

A very interesting suit is taking place today before Justice Newcorn and a jury of twelve men in the city court rooms. The suit, Hawley against the Babcock estate, is a trial one, and if it is won by the plaintiff will bring about eighteen others. Fred Hawley is one of nineteen carpenters that the Babcock estate refused to pay for work done on the Babcock building. Out of the seventeen witnesses called only two testified, and the suit promises to be a very long and tedious one.

The suing carpenter is represented by Judge W. A. Coddington, while Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh is for the Babcock estate.

Plainfield Not In It.

The first annual one hundred-mile handicap race arranged by the Century Cycle Club, of Newark, was run on the Elizabeth-Rahway course Saturday. The race was won by John W. Conklin, one of the scratch men. His time was 5:47 3-5. Three Plainfield riders started but none finished. Kissam had five punctures in the first five miles and gave up. Scott Terry dropped out after making fifteen miles with a sunstroke, and James Voorhees, the last of the three, gave up after riding forty miles on account of sickness caused by not having sufficient training.

Funeral of Frank Schroppe.

The funeral of Frank Schroppe took place yesterday afternoon from St. Joseph's R. C. church and was largely attended. Mr. Schroppe was born in North Plainfield and resided there all his life. He was at one time engaged in the fruit business on West Front street with his brother, John Schroppe. He was a son of George Schroppe, Sr., of Jackson avenue, and was forty years of age at the time of his death and unmarried. He was a quiet person and had not an enemy in the world. Six of deceased's nephews acted as pall-bearers.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

TOO MUCH LOUD TALK.

Borough Court Occupied With the Case of Two Colored People.

Dennis Sutphen, of Westervelt avenue, and Mrs. Hannah Vandervoort, of Hudson lane, both colored, were arraigned before Justice Crosley this morning charged by Marshal Wilson with being drunk and disorderly on Sunday morning between the hours of twelve and two o'clock. According to the evidence the two were driving about the borough and making a disturbance. They went to the house of Mrs. Somerset, also colored, corner of Mountain and Westervelt avenues. Sutphen got out of the carriage and by making a noise awakened Mrs. Somerset, who came down stairs and opened the door. Sutphen grabbed Mrs. Somerset by the throat and at the same time poured forth a volley of the vilest and most abusive language she ever listened to.

The racket attracted the attention of Marshal Wilson who went to the scene of the trouble, and with much difficulty put a stop to the disturbance.

With the assistance of Marsha Doud the two were taken to the borough lockup. Lawyer George DeMeza appeared for Sutphen and Mrs. Vanderwort.

The spectators in court were treated to a lively scene between Justice Crosley and Lawyer DeMeza, owing to differences of opinion in regard to certain rulings. The Justice claimed that Mr. DeMeza was discourteous, and latter claimed that it was impossible to get justice. However, after much discussion, Sutphen was fined $15 and Mrs. Vanderwort $10. Lawyer DeMeza at once appealed the case and will take it to the circuit Court.

In the meantime, until further arrangements can be made, the two will reside in the borough lockup.

SOME ONE'S FUNNY ACT.

Gave the Fire Department a Long Run on a False Alarm.

There have been several cases in which a key to one of the fire-alarm boxes has been stolen and a false alarm sent in, but on Saturday evening the first case occurred in which a different key altered for the purpose has been admitted by some one to the inside of the box.

Shortly after eight o'clock Saturday evening the fire department turned out in response to an alarm sent in from box 27. Special Officer Flynn, who came to the scene of action on the No. 2 hose wagon, was the first to reach the box.

"Where's the fire?" he shouted, but no one answered. Assistant Chief Engineer James Martin was the first of the fire department to join him, but none of the crowd which had then quickly gathered seemed to know who sent in the alarm. Martin suspected that something was wrong and a quick glance showed that the key used to unlock the box was not one of the regular keys belonging to it.

The firemen were notified at once and the recall sent in. The owner of the key is still a mystery to both fire and police departments, but should he be caught it will go hard with him.

KNIGHTS OFF FOR A GOOD TIME.

Large Number of Plainfielders Go to Phillipsburg.

The annual field day exercises of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, of the State of New Jersey, is being held at Phillipsburg today. Knights from all parts of the State are in attendance as guests of Ortesie Division, of Phillipsburg. A special train passed through Plainfield at 9:15 stopping to take the local knights.

Those present from Crescent Division, No. 13, U. R., K. of P., of Plainfield, include: H. Werner, J. H. Tier, Jr., E. Mackey, M. Terrill, S. Robinson, Joseph Flack, F. Dunham, J. D. Pope, C. McGinley, B. Moore, D. Blackford, Rudolph Speigel, Stephen Higham, C. Giese, Jr., J. Liable, M. Turton, J. Rounceville, Joseph Blimm, W. Milliken, W. Kriney, G. W. Clark, L. DeCamp, C. Foster, C. Stultz, T. Osmun, J. Wakefiely, T. Mason, E. Garrison, C. Ulrich, J. E. Flannery.

Among the important features of the day's programme will be the formation of a bicycle division among the State Knights who ride wheels.

James Scott accompanied the Knights and will refresh the latter with cool water along the line of march.

The meet will probably be one of the largest and most successful ever held.

Line Up There.

The candidates for the Y.M.C.A. are requested to meet this evening in the gymnasium for preliminary practice. Manager L. E. Waring will be present and look after the players.

A RUNAWAY'S MAD GALLOP.

W. J. TUNISON'S HORSE BREAKS UP TWO WAGONS IN A DAY.

Mr. Tunison Thought to Quiet the Animal by Hitching Him Up a Second Time, But It Was a Bad Undertaking

An excited horse made things rather lively in the streets of Plainfield yesterday afternoon by running away twice. One roadwagon was badly damaged and another partially so as as the result of the two runaways.

The horse was the property of Watson J. Tunison, the flour and feed merchant, of Watchung avenue, and was being driven down LaGrande avenue towards Netherwood at about 3:30. The sewer contractors have been excavating at the intersection of LaGrande avenue and Franklin place and left only a small passage way for vehicles. The iron top of the man hole lay near by and when the horse saw it he began to shy toward the other side of the road, but on that side there was a man watering his grass, and the hiss of the water startled the animal who made a bolt for a large pile of dirt near by. Mr. Tunison tried to pull the horse into LaGrande avenue, but the animal would not be guided, and started down Franklin place. As the carriage swung around the corner the wheel struck the curb and was dished, throwing Mr. Tunison out of the carriage. The horse ran down to East Fifth street, and in front of the residence of J. P. Laire, ran his burden into a tree and completely smashed it. The harness gave way and the horse started down the sidewalk alone as far as Watchung avenue, and then turned into the street and ran to his stable on Sycamore street. There were several narrow escapes when the horse was galloping down the sidewalk. Two little girls, who were walking the same direction as the horse was going, stepped off the sidewalk just in time to escape the horse's hoofs.

Mr. Tunison, who was not seriously injured by his fall, walked to the stable and harnessed the horse to another road wagon. He started up Sycamore street towards East Seventh street, but the frightened animal was still excited and tried to bolt again. Mr. Tunison, seeing he could not stop the runaway, jumped out and left the horse and carriage to its fate. The animal ran into the yard of Mr. Yates and then turning about started for the little children that were gathered on the lawn in front of Grace P. E. church. There was a general rush for some point of safety, but the general screaming sent the runaway galloping along to West Seventh street, up which he ran to Plainfield avenue and followed that street to New Brooklyn, where a colored man named Scott, who had chased the flying animal all the way on his wheel, captured him and took him to Thompson's stable in that place. The mad course of the horse on West Seventh street was a sign for a general scattering of other teams and bicyclists. One colored man was chasing after the runaway, and tried to pass to one side, but the horse made a little turn and the rider struck a tree, knocking his machine out of all resemblance to a wheel. There were other numerous escapes of both wheelmen and carriages.

Bullet Extracted 33 Years After.

William Osborne, of Somerville, a veteran of the battle of the Wilderness, was lamed by a bullet-wound thirty-three years ago. A few weeks ago he went to Dr. Sutphen, of Liberty Corners, to have him treat what he supposed to be a white swelling on his leg. The doctor, after poulticing and probing the sore, extracted a musket ball.

Education of Colored People.

Abby D. Monroe, superintendent of the Laing School for colored people at Mount Pleasant, S. C., will be at the Friends meeting house on Watchung avenue on Wednesday at four p. m., and give an address upon "Education of the Colored People of the South." She will be pleased to meet all those interested.

ROASTING IN THE EAST

Unusual Weather for the Month of September.

Yesterday Was a Record Breaker and Much Suffering Was Caused—The Warm Wave Extended All Over the Country East of the Mississippi—Cool Wave Advancing.

Washington, Sept. 23.—In the region east of the Mississippi yesterday was the hottest September day in many years, and at some points the hottest day of the year, and to-day promises to be equally as hot with probable thunder storms along the Atlantic coast followed by cooler weather to-morrow.

Warning of the Cool Wave.

Warnings were sent out last night by the weather bureau to the states of the Ohio valley in anticipation that the cool wave will extend over these states by to-night. The approach of this cold wave was first indicated by the reports received from the extreme northwest Canadian station Thursday and its slow movement to the southward was due to an extended area of high pressure which covered the eastern half of the United States with its center over the south Atlantic states. This distribution of pressure gave persistent warm, southerly winds until the area of high pressure covering the cold wave gathered sufficient force to overcome this resistance. The cool wave was driven almost southward over the Rocky mountain states during the 20th and 21st. The rapid development of the depression which is now central over Lake Superior will hasten the movement of this cool wave to the eastward and every available means of notifying the public of the much needed change of temperature was brought into requisition last night in the states as far east as Pennsylvania. Within this region about 2,000 stations or towns have been notified of the probable break in the warm wave.

RELIEF FOR CHICAGO.

After a Week of Sweltering Weather the Cool Wave Arrives.

Chicago, Sept. 23.—The hottest September week which the people of Chicago have experienced in over twenty years was followed last night by a sudden cold. The temperature all day was as high as on any day during the phenomenal hot spell, the thermometer at 3 p. m. registering at the United States bureau 91 degrees. At midnight last night the mercury in the Auditorium tower showed 60 degress, a drop of 25 degrees in eight hours. The temperature contiued to fall slowly as the great cold blast from the northwest approached in all its relieving force. There were half a dozen serious prostrations from the heat during the day and one death. William Walters, an employe of the North Chicago street railroad, fell dead while at work. Ten deaths from heat directly were recorded for the week ending last night and many serious prostrations.

HARVEST FOR CONEY ISLAND.

In Consequence of the Warm Weather the Season Reopens.

Coney Island, N. Y., Sept. 23.—More than 20,000 persons were down at this resort yesterday, the largest number ever seen here at this time of the year. The weather was extremely warm, the thermometer rising to 87 degrees in the shade. Bathing pavilions, dance halls, concert halls and hotels that closed for the season reopened yesterday. The large crowd so stimulated several business men that they are seriously talking of making Coney Island a winter resort by keeping open the year round. The business men of Coney Island will hold a meeting at the Prospect hotel to-morrow and a committee will be appointed to call upon the railroad companies to consult about continuing the autumn time table.

Hottest September Day Ever Known

New York, Sept. 23.—According to local forecaster Dunn, chief of the weather bureau in this city, yesterday was the hottest September 22 in the records of the bureau, the mercury reaching 96.6 degrees at 4 p. m. The nearest approach to this figure was on Sept. 22, 1872, when the mercury reached 85 degrees. Yesterday's temperature was 22 degrees above the average. Last night the weather was more endurable, the mercury having dropped thirteen degrees in four hours.

Beats the Oldest Inhabitant.

Derry, N. H., Sept. 23.—Some of the oldest residents consider yesterday the hottest known here in September for more than thirty years. The thermometer registered 97 in the shade at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

94 at Boston.

Boston, Sept. 23.—At the weather bureau in this city yesterday the mercury climbed to 94. At Watertown, Mass., it registered 97 in the shade.

103 in the Shade.

Newton, Mass., Sept. 23.—It is reported that the thermometer at Newtonville registered 103 in the shade yesterday afternoon.

90 Degrees at Newport.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 23.—Newport had her hottest day of the season yesterday, the thermometer registering 90 in the shade.

NO RACE IN ENGLISH WATERS.

No Offer for English, Australian and American Yachts.

London, Sept. 23.—The Sportsman today publishes a letter from Laycock, Goodfellow & Bell, bankers, in which they offer a trophy manufactured out of Australian gold for a contest in English waters in 1896 between English, American and Australian yachts, the competing boats to be under ninety tons.

Lake and Canal Traffic.

Buffalo, Sept. 23.—The past week showed improvement in several respects in lake and canal traffic. General merchandise has begun to move quite freely, grain receipts were fairly active and coal shipments were nearly up to the standard. Lake freight rates are comparatively high.

Banker's Prix Mirecourt.

Paris, Sept. 23.—George Banker, the American bicyclist, won the Prix Mirecourt at the Velodrome du Seine yesterday. The distance was two kilometres. Antony was second and Gouglotz third

THE WESTERN CORN CROP.

Estimates Place This Year's Production at 2,000,000,000 Bushels.

New York, Sept. 23.—A special from Dwight, Ill., signed by Thornton K. Prime, says: "Iowa this season will come to the front with the largest crop of corn of any state in the corn belt. According to our most reliable figures she will this season crowd nearly 300,000,000 bushels. Kansas claims the next place in the pyramid and will run from two and a half to two and three-quarter hundred million bushels. Missouri makes a very close third, two and a half hundred millions, and Illinois is very nearly the same. The crop of Nebraska is a little more than one hundred and fifty million bushels. The magnitude of the crop and its certainty of being a large one is demonstrated clearly from the fact that farmers have been willing to take the lowest prices for corn of last season during the last thirty days in order to make room for the new crop. My estimate of the corn crop for 1895 is 2,000,000,000 bushels."

CONGRATULATING THE DUKE.

Prince of Wales Wishes Him Happiness in His Coming Marriage.

New York, Sept. 23.—The Duke of Marlborough received many letters, messages and cablegrams of congratulation upon his engagement to Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt. Among the prominent personages who took more than a passing notice of the interesting affair were the Prince of Wales, who wished him all happiness, and the Marquis of Lansdowne, the former the god-father and the latter a warm personal friend of the duke and his family. The duke left this city with the party of Sir Rivers Wilson, president of the Canadian Trunk railroad at Weehawken, traveling in a special car. He expects to visit Montreal and various of the Canadian cities and will be absent from the city for about one week. Upon leaving the party it is expected that he will rejoin Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt and his fiance at Newport.

MISS STEVENSON'S HEALTH.

Denial of a Rumor That She Is Afflicted with Consumption.

Danville, Ky., Sept. 23.—Intimate friends deny a New York dispatch which stated that Miss Julia Stevenson, daughter of the vice president, was verging on consumption, and that her engagement to Martin D. Hardin, of this city, has been broken off in consequence. Miss Stevenson is enjoying better health than for several years, having been greatly benefitted by her trip to Alaska this summer. It is generally believed that she and Mr. Hardin, who is the son of P. W. Hardin, democratic nominee for governor, will be married before he completes his education for the ministry.

EXPORT OF WAR MUNITIONS.

Extent of Uncle Sam's Dealings in That Branch of Trade.

Washington, Sept. 23.—In view of the activity prevailing in the shipment of arms and ammunition to Cuba it is interesting to note the extent to which the United States exports munitions of war. Treasury Statistician Ford reports the value of exports of fire arms for the last seven months at $515,757 and of gunpowder and cartridges $797,422. The exports named are not aggregated by countries as is done in many classes of exports of much greater value, so it cannot be stated what is the value of exports of this kind sent to Cuba.

TO SAIL WEDNESDAY.

The Valkyrie May Have the Big Valhalla for a Consort.

New York, Sept. 23.—The Valkyrie is still in the basin of the Atlantic Yacht club. The work of preparing her for her sea voyage is now practically completed, and to-day will see her fully provisioned for her journey home. Capt. Cranfield said he thought she would leave here on Wednesday next, and as that is the day set for the departure of Lord Dunraven on the Valhalla, it is thought that Mr. Laycock's big yacht, which primarily depends upon her sails, although provided with steam power, will act as a consort to the Valkyrie for some part of the journey.

PROBABLY THE JUANITA.

Identity of the Yacht Which Sunk at Portsmouth Friday.

Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 23.—The identity of the sloop yacht which ran against the Portsmouth and Kittery bridge last Friday night and sank, drowning her crew of two men, seems to be partially established as the Juanita of the Dorchester Yacht club. The boat left Boston one week ago, having on board Ray H., aged 23 years, son of Charles E. Nye, and Fred P., aged 19 years, son of F. A. Blakeslee, both of West Medford, Mass. Both were unmarried.

GREAT FREIGHT BLOCKADE.

Fire in the Bozeman, Montana, Tunnel Stops Traffic.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 23.—A great freight blockadge has been caused on the Northern Pacific railroad by a fire in the Bozeman, Mont., tunnel, which started ten days ago. Five hundred cars are side tracked in the Helena yards and there are hundreds more standing between Bozeman and Billings. The fire is in the centre of tunnel, which is 8,800 feet long.

AFTER 30 YEARS' SERVICE.

Rev. Dr. Wheeler, of Poughkeepsie, Resigns His Pastorate.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sept. 23.—Rev. Dr. Francis Wheeler, for thirty years pastor of the Presbyterian church in this city, tendered his resignation at the morning service yesterday. He has been fifty years in the vicinity. He will be made pastor emeritus.

Destroyed a Locomotive.

Stony Creek, Conn., Sept. 23.—A switch engine belonging to the Red Granite company was ruined by unknown mischief makers Saturday night. The engine, a new one, was fired up and then allowed to run down the company's tracks to the quarry. Here it left the track and is now embedded in three feet of mud.

Divers Afraid of Sharks.

Madrid, Sept. 23.—A dispatch from Havana to the Imparcial says that divers have refused to examine the wreck of the sunken warship Sanchez Barcaiztegui owing to the large number of sharks that infest the harbor, particularly in the vicinity of the entrance to the harbor, where the warship went down.

MISS HUNT'S SAD DEATH

Stricken at Sea While on Her Voyage Home.

The Popular Philadelphia Artist Had Been Traveling Abroad in Search of Health—Became a Raving Maniac and Suffered Terribly on Board the Ship.

Philadelphia, Sept. 23.—When the American line steamship Rhynland from Liverpool drew up to her wharf yesterday her flags were at half mast, and it was learned shortly afteward that Miss L. Hunt, a well known Philadelphia artist, had died on board in great agony on the morning of the 20th. The greatest reticence was maintained by all on board as to the cause of Miss Hunt's death, but it was admitted that for six days previous she had been a raving maniac and had been placed under surveillance. She is said to have been suffered from nervous strain since early in the spring, when she almost lost her life in a fire in the house in which she lived on Broad street. She never thoroughly recovered, and early in June went abroad in the hope that the change would benefit her health. She traveled extensively through England, Germany and France.

Her Sufferings Were Terrible.

When she came on board the Rhynland at Liverpool on the 11th she seemed in perfect health and most cheerful, but hardly had the ship cleared the Irish coast than her peculiar actions began to be noticed by all on board. At times she became violent and her shrieks at night attracted attention and caused consternation among the saloon passengers. She became more and more violent until it was found necessary to place her under restraint. For several days previous to her death she suffered terribly, and no medical skill seemed able to relieve her, although in addition to the ship's surgeon there were a number of skillful physicians on board. When death came the ship was only a few hundred miles from the capes, and upon the recommendation of the surgeon, Capt. Boeswitz decided to have the body preserved and landed her. Miss Hunt is described by the passengers as a beautiful lady of rare accomplishments, and the grief and sympathy expressed for her by all on board was general. She had told some of the passengers that she intended, upon her arrival here, to take up a permanent residence in Baltimore.

FITZ EN ROUTE SOUTH.

He Still Insists on the Referee Being Selected at the Last Moment

Washington, Sept. 23.—"Bob" Fitzsimmons, the pugilist, accompanied by Duncan C. Ross, Ernest Roeber and White, his rubber down, arrived in Washington last night at 11 o'clock from New York over the Pennsylvania railroad and half an hour later left over the Southern railway for Lynchburg, Va. There an exhibition will be given tonight, and after stops at Danville, Va., and Atlanta, Ga., Fitzsimmons will go to Dallas, Tex., for the purpose of beginning training for his mill with Corbett. Fitzsimmons was asked if he had changed his mind with reference to the selection of a referee, and he replied emphatically, "No; I don't want one named until the day before the fight."

FIVE PERSONS PERISHED.

Landslide on the Champlain River at St. Luce.

Three Rivers, Que., Sept. 23.—A landslide of large extent occurred Saturday night at 9 o'clock on the Champlain river at St. Luce, Champlain county, carrying with it the house of Zephisin Normandin and burying five members of the family in the ruins. Three children who heard the noise escaped by jumping through the windows. One of them has become insane through fright. Five dead bodies have been dug out. The river is completely blocked and other landslides and inundations are feared.

NEARING THE END.

Archbishop Kenrick Very Feeble and His Mind Is a Blank.

St. Louis, Sept. 23.—The prolonged hot weather has told seriously upon the venerable Archbishop Kenrick, now in his 89th year. It is no longer a secret that his mind is almost a blank and that he is living in second childhood. Yesterday his attendants missed him and upon searching found him wandering along Lindell boulevard near the archiepiscopal residence. He was very feeble, showing that the end is near.

THE MAYBRICK CASE.

Baroness De Roque Has Discovered New Evidence.

London, Sept. 23.—The Baroness de Roque, mother of Mrs. Florence Maybrick, who is now at Rouen, is said to have communicated with her solicitors in regard to new and important evidence in the Maybrick case. It will be submitted to the home secretary, Sir Matthew White Ridley, who has promised to review the case.

WANTS FOUR DIVORCES.

Yellow Bonnet's Wives Refuse To Become Christians with Him.

Tolaga, Okla., Sept. 23.—Yellow Bonnet, a Cheyenne Indian, has applied for a blanket divorce from his four wives. It is the first time that an Indian has applied for a divorce in Oklahoma. Yellow Bonnet recently embraced the Christian religion but his wives refused to become Christians.

Annie Beekman's Hat Found.

Somerville, N. J., Sept. 23.—The sailor hat worn by Annie Beekman on the night she was murdered was found yesterday on the river bank a quarter of a mile from the scene of the murder. The finding of the hat would seem to show that the man who murdered the girl carried it with him and threw it away. As it was found between the scene of the murder and Johnson's house it is thought important.

Death of a New York Lawyer.

New York, Sept. 23.—James Francis Ruggles, the well known lawyer of this city, died yesterday morning from heart failure at his house on Irving place.

Paris, Sept. 23.—The Gaulois says the government is considering the question of issuing a new loan this year.

FREEZING IN THE WEST

Snow a Foot Deep on the Level in Wyoming.

The Oldest Settler Cannot Remember a Similar Blizzard at This Season of the Year—The Cold Wave Moving Eastward Rapidly—Big Drop in the Mercury.

Denver, Col., Sept. 23.—The damage done to the fruit interests of the state by the heavy snow fall of Saturday night is beyond computation. In the vicinity of Denver fruit and shade trees were broken by the heavy snow freezing to the limbs, in full leaf, and scarcely a tree for miles around escaped injury. Reports from the interior show the same deplorable conditions, varying only in degree. While the fruit growers may save most of the matured fruit, the more serious injury is in the broken trees and shattered trunks. The snowstorm was general over the state, the amount varying from four to twelve inches. Yesterday the sun shone clear. There was a killing frost last night, and this morning the air is cold and raw.

A Foot of Snow on the Level.

Buffalo, Wyo., Sept. 23.—An equinoxial storm started here Friday with a severe gale, continuing all day and night, accompanied by snow. Saturday night the temperature dropped below freezing and a heavy snow fell all night and lasted until last night. The weather is now partly clear, with temperature at 27 degrees above zero. Fully a foot of snow fell upon the level, which has formed into drifts making travel difficult. Settlers have not seen so severe a blizzard at this season.

COLD WAVE STRIKES IOWA.

Came Suddenly, the Mercury Falling 32 Degrees in 15 Minutes.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 23.—The cold wave from the northwest reached here yesterday afternoon. In the early part of the day it was very hot and the sky almost clear. About noon the sky became overcast, and 1 o'clock the clouds suddenly took on the appearance of an approaching cyclone. The temperature fell with the most remarkable rapidity ever known here. In fifteen minutes the fall was 32 degrees, and since then it has been slowly sinking. The fall at 1 o'clock was instantaneous; a wall of cold air seemed to pass in and force out the hot. A few minutes after a heavy rain set in, accompanied by a wind that reached a velocity of sixty miles and did some damage. It was very cold last night and a severe frost prevailed.

Big Change in Twelve Hours.

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 23.—A tremendous cold wave came upon this region Saturday night. Two inches of snow fell at Lead, S. D., and snow fell over parts of western Nebraska and Wyoming. The mercury dropped 51 degrees in twelve hours.

DEFEAT OF THE ENGLISHMEN.

British Press Comment on the International Athletic Games.

London, Sept. 23.—The Graphic, referring to Saturday's international athletic contests in New York, frankly admits the signal defeat of the British athletes, and says: "It would be idle now to talk of the non-representative character of the London team. The London athletic club entered the contest and must cheerfully abide by the results, only hoping for a speedy reversal of the fortune of war." The Standard says: "It would have been infinitely better if the London athletic club had stood by its old members, thereby giving an international character to the contest. We are badly beaten and must abide by the result. The Americans are probably the finest team of athletes the world has ever seen." The Daily News: "If England has any reserve forces they can be brought out when the American athletes visit London, as they doubtless will do."

CAPT. ANSON'S VIEWS.

He Says That Cleveland Has Good Chances of Winning the Pennant.

St. Louis, Sept. 23.—Capt. Anson has the following to say about the league race: "The contest is very exciting and Cleveland has a splendid chance to win the pennant. She is only ten points behind Baltimore and I believe that the protested game will be thrown out. Of course Cleveland has to play Chicago yet, and we will win that one sure. Cleveland has been easy for us on our home grounds and we won't give anyone chance to say that we laid down. I'll bet even money that Hanlon did not make the remarks credited to him, in which he is alleged to claim the western clubs are laying down to Cleveland. Hanlon is not that sort of a man."

CARLISLE AT GRAY GABLES.

Simply a Social Call and Had No Connection with Business.

Buzzards Bay, Sept. 23.—Secretary Carlisle was at Gray Gables for two hours yesterday afternoon. He was spending the day in Marion at Hamlin cottage, having arrived yesterday morning. It was learned at Gray Gables last night that there was no significance in Mr. Carlisle's visit here, that it was simply a call on the family.

Chicago Italians Parade.

Chicago, Sept. 23.—Four thousand sons and daughters of Italy, most of them resplendent in picturesque regalia and native costume, paraded the streets of the city yesterday. It was the closing act of the three days' celebration of Italian independence. Forty-two Italian organizations including two women's societies participated in the parade.

Big Strike Threatened.

Toledo, O., Sept. 23.—The eight hundred employes of the Lozier Manufacturing company of this city are on the verge of a strike because of wages. The Lozier company is one of the largest bicycle concerns in the United States. The men say a cut in wages is to be made because wheels will be much cheaper next season.

FRIGHTENED ITALY'S QUEEN.

Crazy Officer Jumped on Her Carriage and Spoke to Her.

Rome, Sept. 23.—A monument to Cavour, which was erected by the municipality, was inaugurated yesterday in the presence of the king and queen and the Prince of Naples, the members of the ministry and an enormous concourse of people. The syndic of Rome made an address. While the king and queen were returning from the ceremony an officer of the Sicilian infantry tried to mount the steps of the royal carriage, at the same time addressing some words to the queen. It was thought that he was appealing for amnesty for the four leaders of the Sicilian riots, who the king, while liberating all other political offenders, has refused to pardon. The officer was arrested and taken to the barracks. Afterwards it was learned that he had besought the queen to prohibit scientific experiments on living animals. He has been a sufferer from epilepsy, and his mind is said to be slightly affected. In the afternoon the king and queen attended the opening of the Geographical congress. Afterwards their majesties were present at various exercises connected with the fetes.

PEARY'S GREAT PLIGHT.

The Survival of His Expedition Is Remarkable.

St. Johns, N. F., Sept. 23.—Full details of the dreadful sufferings of Peary, Lee and Henson are now becoming public. It is a cause for wonder how they survived. No other case is known where Arctic explorers deliberately took their lives in their hands and ventured upon a most exacting enterprise with the full knowledge that their supply of food was insufficient and that they would probably perish in the attempt. Peary's disappointment over the unsatisfactory termination of the expedition is unconcealed, but all admit that he is not responsible for their failure. No human being could have done more to make the expedition a success. Had he more men, or even sufficient provisions, he would have accomplished much. All members of the expedition leave for New York by the steamer Silvia sailing from here Thursday next.

STANLEY IN CANADA.

The Explorer To Spend a Few Days in Hunting and Fishing.

Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 23.—After a pleasant stay of several days in Winnipeg, during which time he was entertained in various ways by leading public men, Henry M. Stanley, the famous African explorer, left here over the Canadian Pacific railway for the Canadian rockies. Mr. Stanley will spend a couple of days in the mountains hunting and fishing with a party of gentlemen who have arranged to accompany him. His traveling companion west is Charles Mackintosh, governor of the northwest territories. It is understood that Mr. Stanley has been commissioned by the king of the Belgians to report on the Canadian northwest country as a field for Belgan immigrants.

SENSATION AT HOT SPRINGS.

A Physician Drugs and Robs a Woman at a Hotel.

Hot Springs, Ark., Sept. 23.—Quite a sensation has been created here by the arrest of Dr. H. S. Town of San Antonio, Tex., on the charge of having drugged and robbed Mrs. Kate Kettles, a prominent lady of Oak Ridge, La., at the United States hotel. It appears that Dr. Town and his wife invited Mrs. Nettles to join them in a glass of wine in their room at the hotel. She was taken very ill after drinking the wine, when the doctor gave her a hypodermic injection which rendered her unconscious. She was robbed of her gold watch and $96 in cash. Dr. Town confessed the robbery and was placed in jail.

PROBABLY FATALLY INJURED.

Lawyer Mervine, of Altoona, Hurt in a Carriage Accident.

Altoona, Pa., Sept. 23.—N. P. Mervine, a leading member of the Blair county bar, met with an accident last evening which may cost him his life. He was out driving with his family and when descending a steep hill the neck yoke which held the horses to the tongue broke. He was drawn over the dasher and trampled under the horses' feet, sustaining a long and deep wound on top of the head, a large gash across the throat and all his front teeth were knocked out. The horses soon freed themselves from the carriage. Mrs. Mervine escaped unhurt.

FIRST OF ITS KIND.

An American Iron Company's Contract with a Foreign City.

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 23.—The Howard-Harrison Iron company of Bessemer, has secured a contract for several thousand tons of 18-inch iron pipe for the city of Honolulu. The contract is for a sufficient supply to sewer the city, and the order before completed is expected to exceed 20,000 tons. TROUBLE IN BRAZIL

Serious Political Crisis Approaching.

President Moraes' Threat of Resigning Unless Amnesty to Revolutionists in Rio Grande do Sol is Granted Met by Serious Opposition in the House of Deputies.

New York, Sept. 23.—The Herald's correspondent in Rio Janeiro, Braz' telegraphs that the political situation in Brazil is very serious and that apparently a crisis is approaching. President Moraes' ultimatum that he will resign unless the bill granting amnesty to revolutionists in Rio Grande do Sul shall be passed, has been met by a resolve on the part of the house of deputies that the bill will never become a law without the introduction of important restrictions. One group of senators has issued a manifesto addressed to the public, in which it is stated that the passage of the original amnesty bill is a political necessity and must be accomplished. There has been a serious clash here between Argentina's deputies and the minister of finance, Senor Romero. It is reported that the minister may resign.

DR. ABBOTT'S INJURIES.

Not So Serious as First Report, But Still Painful.

Newburg, N. Y., Sept. 23.—The accident Saturday to the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, pastor of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, is not as serious as at first supposed. There is only a slight fracture of the left collar bone, and an arm and leg somewhat bruised. There are no internal injuries. Dr. Abbott suffers some pain, but is able to walk about the house. He expects to make a business trip to New York tomorrow and will deliver an address in Harlem Thursday evening. Dr. Abbott thinks he will be able to resume preaching in Plymouth church next Sunday, but will have to carry his arm in a sling for two or three weeks.

NEW YORK'S DRY SUNDAY.

Saloonkeepers Generally Obeyed the Excise Law.

New York, Sept. 23.—Yesterday, if anything, was even dryer than the previous Sunday, there being only a few places where liquors could be obtained and then only by those well acquainted with the dealer. At all other places where there was the least indication of an attempt at doing business policemen were at once detailed to the place and put on watch at the door. An additional step was taken yesterday in enforcing the law. The clubs having received special attention the previous Sunday yesterday the Turkish bath establishments were forced to stop serving drinks to their guests.

NOW SHE CANNOT SPEAK.

Mrs. Waters Swallowed a Hornet and Was Stung Upon the Tonsils.

Bridgeport, Conn., Sept. 23.—Mrs. Mary Waters of Steuben street was Saturday eating a pear. A hornet lit on it just as she was taking a bite. Rather than lose the fruit, she swallowed the insect, which stung her upon the tonsils. Intense pain followed, her throat became paralyzed and she lost all power of speech. Her physician relieved the pain, but her speech has not yet returned. The injury is not considered permanent, but it is a most remarkable case. Mrs. Waters is an accomplished vocalist and sings in a choir here.

PRIVATE PETTKE A SUICIDE.

His Stomach Could Not Stand Being Experimented With.

Denver, Col., Sept. 23.—Bruno Pettke, who was a private of the Seventh infantry, U. S. A., committed suicide, a victim of the new experiments on condensed rations, which were used on a forced march of soldiers from Fort Logan. He went on a spree and tried to induce vomiting as a means of relief, but failed and then took a dose of morphine with suicidal intent.

J. E. MARTINE,
President Democratic Association.

The Connecticut woman who swallowed a bee ought to be a hummer by this time.

Owing to some quarrell among the City Councilman, Elizabeth policemen are unable to get their salaries.

The weather has been having a great time smashing its summer bargains the last few days. What is most to be desired, though, is a clearing out sale.

The New York Chamber of Commerce claim to have made a canvass of the House of Representatives, and that only eighty-three free silver men were found.

The New York World this morning publishes a large number of interviews with Democrats from all over the State, with whom Chancellor McGill seems to stand most favorable for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

The "practical joker" who sent in the false alarm from box 27 on Saturday night and gave the fire department a long run for nothing, is one of those fellows who will pay a large-sized fine to the city some of these days if he should persist in this sort of joking. Sensible people will not stand it.

The independent vote in this State is now about fifty or sixty thousand strong. Upon the last division which seemed to represent the normal strength of the two parties, there was an apparent difference of something under 10,000 in favor of the Democrats. The last election showed 46,000 Republican majority in the Assembly ticket and 48,000 in the Congressional. Thus the number of voters who are ready to change their political allegiance when they think it right, is up to the figures given above. The neccessity considering this vote should need no argument. If men were willing to change for one good season, they are probably willing to change again for equally good cause. The fact is that party obligations are no longer binding on citizens who have learned how little is to be gained for the public benefit by partisanship.—Newark Call.

The Silver King.

It is ten years since "The Silver King," Henry Arthur Jones' great melodrama first saw a public presentation, and it may be safely stated that there has not in this period appeared a single drama that can be placed in the same class. The human interest with which it is crowded has made it an object lesson in life. The thrilling scenes that follow one upon the other as the plot unfolds are absorbing in their intensity. It is received with the loudest manifestations of applause. Its long run in London was barely excelled by the number of presentations in New York, and the profits from the production have made fortunes. No more fascinating melodrama and none with a better moral has been presented.

An Old Resident Gone.

Dr. Herbert chloroformed Edward Vail's old horse yesterday. It was perhaps the oldest horse in Plainfield, being thirty-five years old.

—Several West End athletes will enter the sports to be held by the Bensonhurst A. C. of Bensonhurst, L. I., the latter part of next month.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

MRS. GROENDYKE'S CASE.

She is Gradually Improving from a Difficult Operation.

Mrs. Groendyke has been confined to her bed from early in June to the present time with what, until Sept. 1st, was mistakenly supposed to be malarial fever, enlargement of the liver and abdominal dropsy. Dr. Endicott the first Sunday in September was called in, pronounced it ovarian tumor, she had no malarial fever, enlargement of the liver, etc., and had not had. The doctor said the only chance for her life was to remove the tumor, and to operate then, in her weak condition, was sure death, so that a systematic course of feeding without the aid of medicine, was instituted, and as soon as she had improved all that it was possible, Dr. Endicott, assisted by Dr. Probasco and Dr. Murray, performed the operation of removing the tumor which weighed thirteen pounds, and contained six quarts of pus. Because of the early mistake in the diagnosis of her disease, the tumor was permitted to grow and press upon the organs of nutrition, and this combined with continued absortion of pus from the tumor caused her to become so poisoned and emaciated that I thought she had but a few days to live. Then I asked that the consultation with Dr. Endicott should be held immediately, with the result as above stated.

The tumor had obtained such an enormous size, the walls became so thin, that it ruptured as soon as the abdomen was opened. Had the operation not been performed at that time this rupture would have soon taken place and death would have followed.

Since the operation, September 19th, under the continued care of Dr. Endicott and two trained nurses, she has continuously improved. Unless some unexpected complication arises the doctor assures me she will get well. To us it seems a young life has been virtually snatched from the jaws of death. Geo. W. F. Randolph.

HOW TO EAT.

Everyone Can Do This But, Not Always the Right Way.

Horace Mann once said that "the lecture platform was the People's College." The great educator recognized the place that lectures have in education and character building. There are great advantages in receiving oral instruction. Perhaps it arises from the fact that there is one faculty less called into play. It is more interesting to attend a lecture than to read an account of it afterward, for as someone has said "There are some things which are entirely independent of the one who talks on the platform, we have the stimulus of intellectual companionship." The attention of the readers of The Press is called to the list of lectures advertised in another column, and especially to the first one by Mrs. Hudders. The importance of "What to eat and how to eat it" is a matter paid too little attention to by most people. Good health is largely due to the selection of foods which best supply the various principles needed. Hence Mrs. Hudders' analysis of various common articles of diet cannot fail to be interesting to all who attend her talk on Oct. 1st.

Next Time the Dog Goes Along.

While Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Blackford, of Grove street, were at Atlantic City last week they left at their home a pet dog which a neighbor kindly fed and watered. The dog was locked in the house every evening, and as the party who looked after him only went as far as the back door, his dogship had a big surprise for his owners upon their return. The mail for Mr. Blackford, which the postman dropped in the front door and fell into the hall, containing two checks, besides several letters, were chewed and torn into bits, and a lace curtain, rugs, and in fact almost everything within his reach was ruined.

TELEPHONING ALONG THE CONGO.

Drums With Which the Natives Are Able to Communicate Long Distances.

Capt. Five, a Belgian explorer, says that the people of the Congo have a curious and interesting method of telephoning. For a long time he refused to believe that the natives really had the power to communicate with others at a distance, though articles had been sent to him in answer to such communications.

At length, one day, journeying on the river by pirogue, and being about fifty miles from Basoko, he determined, instead of stopping, to press on to the village. Then one of his people offered to telephone to the village that the party would reach the place toward evening and would like to have supper prepared on arrival.

A native with a drum then began to beat it after a peculiar fashion, and presently announced that he had heard a reply. He then rolled the drum for some time and tranquilly returned to his paddle. Capt. Five waited with much interest to see whether his approach was expected, and was astonished as he neared Basoko toward evening to recognize on the bank one of his fellow explorers, Lieut. Verellen.

A fire was burning ashore and a supper was being made ready. Capt. Five, after greeting the lieutenant, inquired eagerly how he had learned of the approach of the expedition. The lieutenant replied that the news had been brought some hours before by a negro, who said that a white man was approaching by way of the river and would need supper.

The drum used by the natives for this purpose is a small but noisy affair of wood. It is constantly employed in communicating short distances, in order to save time and trouble. In this instance there had evidently been relays of drummers along the whole fifty miles from the point where the original signal was given to near Basoko. The natives are able, with their drums, to signal messages of considerable length. This particular instance is recorded in La Flandre, a Belgian publication.

The Candy Makers of Formosa.

When it secured Formosa Japan came into the possession of one of the most wonderful sugar lands on the face of the globe. The soil is as rich and fertile as that of Cuba, the climate is dry and salubrious, and the supply of water from the distant mountains in the interior of the island is inexhaustible. Labor is so cheap that you can get a field hand for eight cents a day if a man, five cents a day if a woman, and two or three cents a day if a child.

Besides supplying that great island and many of the surrounding districts of the mainland with sugar, it exports thousands of tons of sugar every year. In 1893, while visiting in Formosa, I learned that their exportation was nearly 50,000 tons, of which some went as far as San Francisco.

A very large amount and an ever-increasing one has gone to Japan every year, which is probably one of the chief reasons why that shrewd little country required Formosa as a part of its indemnity. The sugar centers of Formosa are the two curious cities of Ta-Kow and Tai-Wan-Foo, of which the seaport is An-Ping.

Here profitable employment is given to a very large and thrifty population. One of the chief branches of industry is the making of sugar candy and other dainties. The work is done by men and women alike, the men working chiefly at the heavier tasks and the women at the lighter and nicer ones.

The commonest form of sugar candy is made by boiling the sap quite rapidly in a large kettle, partly clarifying it, skimming off the impurities, and as it reaches the crystalizing point pouring it out into flat pans and there letting it harden.

Equally common is rock candy. This candy is sometimes quite pale and almost colorless; usually, however, it is brown, similar to the cheapest form in our own market. It is employed in enormous quantities by the Chinese, who serve it as a dessert upon the table, use it to give to children, pet buffaloes, family ponies, and to the spirits on "All Saint's Day." It is extremely cheap, ranging from two cents down to one cent per pound.

Pingree Favors Garden Sass Parks.

Mayor Pingree has a new idea along the line of the potato work, which is nothing less than the establishment of permanent agricultural parks as part of the park systems of cities.

"It seems to me," he said in speaking of this plan, "that the time is coming when it will be just as beneficial to the people to have agricultural parks as the more beautiful kind. There ought to be places where the people can have a piece of ground for cultivation. It could be charged for at a nominal rate so as to take away the idea of charity."—Minneapolis Journal.

A Liberal Discount.

Mrs. Boardman—And what does it come to?

Mr. Clevers—Eight pounds, ma'am, at eight cents a pound. Eight eights are eighty-eight; take it for eighty cents.—Philadelphia Times.

Big Guns.

The Krupp steel 130 ton gun has a range of fifteen miles, and can fire two shots a minute. The shot weighs 2,600 pounds, 700 pounds of powder are required for a charge. The cost of a single round from the gun is $1,500.—London Standard.

Georgia papers are telling in good faith of a negro at Blakely, Ga., who was struck on the head by a bolt of lightning a few days ago, and who, though receiving a deep gash in the scalp, is now as spry as ever.

A half dollar dated 1846 was taken from the stomach of a catfish caught in Lake Burnsides, near Scooba, Miss., recently.

LOOK IN THE CLOSET

SEE if you can't find some old clothes that you have put aside because of the worn-out look they have, or some clothes that are badly spotted.

We want you to bring any old clothes of that sort to us—or better yet—we'll send for them.

We propose to clean those clothes—or to dye them for you—either way to make them wearable. This is an economical suggestion.

We take out grease spots so they stay out, or we dye clothes with a color that wears. We charge as little as possible for the work.

Just a dollar or two—and you'll have a lot of new clothes.

Your Pale Face
looks out of place at this season. It shows that the summer sun has been unable to overcome that "queer trouble" that has been making you feel so miserable for the last six or eight months. CAPTURING TIGERS ALIVE.

Some Experiences of an Agent in Search of Menagerie Specimens.

The business of replenishing menageries with wild animals is interesting, especially when the circus agents go directly to the haunts of the beasts to capture them alive. J. B. Gaylord, foreign agent for the Ringling Bros. circus, has had some thrilling experiences in this work. Some time ago he wrote the Ringlings from Singapore about a hunt to capture tigers alive. Among other things he wrote:

"Although the island of Singapore is only fourteen miles in extent, there are no less than 500 tigers in its woods, and people here do not venture alone beyond the city limits after nightfall. The first night after my arrival here, while our ship lay in the harbor, I could plainly hear the roaring of the bloodthirsty beasts as they prowled around the outskirts of the city in search of prey. M. de Silva, the native agent, having located several tigers' trails, we started on foot with about fifty natives the following morning. The trip to the first tiger trail was only three or four miles, and we arrived at this point at about 8 o'clock.

"After locating the trail exactly, and finding the stream to which the tiger must break for water each night on awakening from his all-day sleep—the habit of the tiger—we set about making our preparations. In the direct path of the tiger we dug a pit seven feet wide, ten feet long, and fifteen feet deep, but much longer and wider at the bottom than at the top.

"All the dirt dug from the pit was carefully removed to a considerable distance by the natives, and they showed great care and skill in not leaving any external evidence of the fact that a big hole had been dug. A lot of bamboo strips were next laid over the pit, and these, covered with dry leaves, made to appear like the general surroundings.

"We next took three bamboo sticks about twelve feet in length and placed them in the form of a tripod, in such a position as to bring the point of the tripod directly above the centre of the pit. From the top of the bamboo sticks some of the natives suspended a live goat by a cord barely strong enough to bear its weight, and sure to break if the tiger leaped upon the goat. Everything being in readiness for Mr. Tiger, as soon as he chose to go against our little game, Mr. de Silva and myself, as well as the natives, repaired to a hut about eighty rods distant and awaited developments. It had been dark about an hour, and I began to think we were going to be disappointed, when one of the natives rushed into the hut, crying:

" 'Lend me a beshma.'

"The furious cries of the tiger had startled him as with a terrific roar it sprang upon the suspended goat, and, going down with its burden, sank into the merciless pit prepared for it. Igniting a number of torches both to light the way and to forestall any attack that might possibly be made upon us by wild animals, we proceeded in a body to the pit. The roars of the tiger were awful, as he furiously tried to leap upward to gain his freedom. As I have already explained to you, the sides of the pit slanted inward toward the top, and at every effort the tiger could be heard striking his nose against the loose earth.

"This frantic behavior was kept up for about an hour, when, entirely exhausted, the fierce king of the jungle lay perfectly quiet at the bottom of the pit. Two of the natives now lowered a bamboo basket down into the pit, letting the open side fall directly over the supine form of the tiger. Immediately after this a number of natives jumped into the pit and began crowding rattan withes through the sand beneath the tiger and bringing them around the basket. In this manner the tiger was in a few minutes completely inclosed in the bamboo basket.

"Returning to the hut, we awaited the dawn, and as soon as it appeared the natives went back to the pit and lifted the basket containing the tiger out of it. We detailed ten of the coolies to take our captive to the city. Before they started I took a look at our prize through the rattan withes. He was a magnificent specimen, but the sorriest-looking tiger I ever saw. He was covered with blood from his frantic efforts to get out of the pit, and the skin was peeled from his nose and face, while the eyes were almost entirely closed by the swollen face."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Glass Snake Only a Brittle Lizard.

The glass snake, which is not a snake any more than it is a turtle, has a tail of about two-thirds its entire length. This tail, like the tails of about all lizards in the United States that I have met, is very delicate and easily broken off at times.

When a fourth to a half, or even more, of the animal is detached and the head end wriggles away, and the remainder and sometimes larger part squirms in sight, it is an astonishing spectacle, and I am not surprised that the ignorant should clothe the creature with mysticism.

But, as a matter of fact, all sensible people know that the fragments do not reunite, for it would be impossible to fit together the ruptured blood vessels and shattered nerves and restore the animal. Still this story of traditional force is believed by a host of people, along with other surprising hoopsnake tales, milksnake whoppers, with quill throwing porcupine relations, and a thousand and one other and lesser untruths.

The Reason Why.

Daughter—Papa went away in very good spirits this morning.

Mother—Good gracious! That reminds me that I forgot to ask him for money this morning.—El Noticiere-Universal.

"Jones, I see, is back from his vacation."

"How long was he gone?"

"He doesn't know; says he can recall only five days clearly."

NOT A SHAVE TO BE HAD.

That Is on the City Side—Plenty Across the Brook.

When the clocks struck twelve o'clock Saturday night the city barbers hung up their white coats and went out to enjoy their first real Sunday rest. The new ordinance which makes it a misdemeanor to shave a man on Sunday is not yet old enough for the tonsorial artists to have side doors, and in consequence the man that didn't get his whiskers trimmed Saturday night was obliged to let them grow or else go over the brook. It was reported that the borough shops would close when their city brethren did, but they did not. They did a heavy business all the morning.

Sprained His Ankle.

Harry Bush, in the employ of Honan & Sons, went to the mountains back of Johnston's drive yesterday with a party of friends. In returning last evening they came down the drive and when near Somerset street, Bush stumbled against a rock and fell. His friends picked him up and it was discovered that he had sprained his left leg. A horse and wagon was secured and he was brought to Plainfield.

An Easy Problem.

Why is it that so many housekeepers go to Neuman Brothers to purchase their peaches? That is very simple, because their prices are so low and their assortment so fine. Tomorrow they will have another lot of 150 baskets of table and canning peaches. Visit their store and examine them.

Plains Boys Redeem Themselves.

The Scotch Plains boys redeemed themselves Saturday by defeating the strong Bayonne team by the score of 5 to 6. Johnston occupied the box for the home team and did good work.

She Fell In.

A young woman from Scotch Plains went boating with a party of friends on New Market pond last evening. She was upset, but escaped with a ducking.

Too Hot for Study.

Owing too the excessive heat this afternoon the public schools all through the city are closed, and the scholars are home enjoying a half holiday.

John Livezay went to New Brunswick yesterday morning on his wheel in company with a party of friends. On the return trip, about two miles this side of New Brunswick, one of Livezay's tires punctured and he had to walk all the rest of the way home.

—Peaches are peaches, but they are not all alike, and if you want the best go to Neuman Brothers tomorrow. He will have 150 baskets of the choicest. Don't forget him.

—If you have not been suited in wall-paper it is evident you did not go to Love's.

ELECTRICITY ON RAILROADS.

Is Its Future Limited to Passenger Traffic Exclusively.

The New York Central Railroad Company establishes a short branch line at Buffalo with electric traction. The New York, New Haven & Hartford does the same thing.

The 96-ton electric locomotive for the Baltimore belt tunnel has been hauling freight regularly. An electric motor for elevated lines was one of the features exhibited at the annual stockholders' meeting of the Westinghouse Company held recently.

The trolley lines are successfully competing for the steam passenger traffic which they parallel in all parts of the country. The development of electric traction has attained a point where it is practicable to take stock and see with some clearness what its immediate implications are.

The first conclusion is that where steam passenger traffic between fairly populous towns is paralleled by electric lines it is worth the while of the steam line to acquire the competing trolley. If, however, the main traffic be express, then it is not worth the steam line's while to interfere.

There is as yet no prospect at all of electricity superseding steam for freight traction. It would be easy to show that electricity cannot be economically applied for passenger traction on a two-track road compelled to use steam for its freight business.

The one chance for electricity to make its way, for a long time, in ordinary rail traffic, would be in the case of four-track roads, which may yet be found substituting it for steam on tracks used exclusively, or nearly so, for passenger traffic.

It should, however, pay the main lines to equip a certain part of their branch lines electrically. These conclusions are substantially those reached by President Duncan, of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, at the Niagara Falls meeting of that association. President Duncan draws one other inference, namely, that in order to remain on a basis earning fixed charges many two-track lines must either build additional tracks or control the electric lines that parallel them.

This conclusion, if sound, seems to conduct toward very deep water indeed. In view of the particular lines which are in the hands of receivers, it might be said that some of them are more likely to be controlled by the parallel trolleys than the reverse.—New York Sun.

OUR RED BROTHER.

A MINE OF FACTS ABOUT THEIR HABITS AND CUSTOMS.

They Are in Twenty States and Territories. The Entire Indian Population Almost 250,000, and Nearly 100,000 Earn Their Own Living.

More about the present day Indians of the United States than was ever told in a book before is contained in the final census report just issued from the Government Printing Office. It forms an immense quarto volume of 688 pages, profusely illustrated with original photo engravings and sketches in colors, and was prepared by Thomas Donaldson, of Philadelphia, the antiquarian and Indian expert.

He gave to the task the varied resources of his wide acquaintance among Indian students and Indian artists, and many of the latter he sent into the field to make at first hand drawings, photographs and oil sketches of striking phases of Indian life. He secured pictures from the brushes of such painters as Peter Moran, Julian Scott, Walter Shirlaw, Gilbert Gaul and H. R. Poore—men whose time it would have been impossible to employ for such a purpose under ordinary circumstances.

The result is a report of great excellence, both in substance and appearance, and it is especially valuable in that it gives full particulars of tribal customs, religious and social, with interesting details relating to Indian dress, &c.

This final report embraces, beside the four separate special bulletins heretofore issued on the Moquis, the Five Civilized Tribes, the Eastern Cherokees, of North Carolina, and the Six Nations, of New York, an equal amount of unpublished matter respecting the Indians elsewhere on reservation and in the separate States and Territories.

The total Indian population of the United States in 1890 is set down as 248,-163, not including the 32,042 Indians of Alaska. Of these 248,253, the males are stated to number 125,719 and the females 122,584. Those living on reservation number 138,417, of whom 34,785 receive rations from the Government, and 98,-632 earn their own living through farming, herding, root digging, horse raising fishing and hunting.

The Indians who are classed as citizens taxed or taxable number 58,806, and these, with the self supporting Indians on reservations and the Five Civilized Tribes and the Six Nations, of New York, make a total of 212,900 self supporting. The Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory and the other Indians living with them aggregate 50,055 souls, and the Six Nations, of New York number 5,407 souls.

The reservation Indians are located in twenty different States and Territories, and include about 147 tribes or parts of tribes, occupying about 78,500,000 acres of unallotted land, much of it desert. The reservations are embraced within 24 agencies and are each controlled by an agent appointed by the President, with a complete civic administration, physicians, clerks, school teachers, farmers and mechanics.

There are about 3,000 white employes on the reservations. Some of the agencies are controlled by army officers with a force of soldiers. The Indian police force consists of 770 Indian policemen, including officers.

Apropos the inexorable decline of the Indian race on this continent in the presence of the white race, the census writer thus philosophizes:

"Over the old hunting grounds, across the silvery streams which thread the brown barrens and plains, up the tall mountains among the towering pines to the snow capped and sun touched summits, in the land once the home of his people, the Indian of to day can cast only a longing eye and reflect.

"The plains are silent to the tread of the Indian host; no monuments or structures tell their story; no footprints in the rocks, no piles of carved or sculptured stone speak of their patience, ingenuity or their presence.

"For the remaining Indian, the painter, the museum and the art preservative alone can tell the story. Even nature, the Indian's god is silent as to him, and speaks not. Such has been his life, such the result, that if the entire remaining Indians were instantly and completely wiped out from the face of the earth, they would leave no monuments, no buildings, no written language, save one; no literature, no inventions, nothing in the arts and sciences, and absolutely nothing for the benefit of mankind. All of the Indian past is now largely reflection and retrospection."

A Martyr to Principle.

"Here is food!"

The starving man crawled feebly forward. His hollow eyes burned and glittered at the sight of the savory viands. His parched lips moistened.

"Ah!" he gasped. His voice had a hoarse rattle. "Something to eat!"

Rescue had come not a minute too soon.

"But—"

"What is it?" cried the famished creature, stretching out his parchment hands, so thin—oh, so painfully thin and transparent!

"You will have to wash up the dishes."

"Sir! What do you take me for? My wife is in the country."

And he turned away.

Death rather than dish washing.—Judge.

Advancing Backward.

"They tell me that you do not favor the movement for the emancipation of woman," said Mrs. Beard to Mrs. Taddles.

"I don't," replied Mrs. Taddles.

"Don't you believe in the equality of the sexes?"

"Not for a moment."

"How on earth can you acknowledge that man is so far above you as that—how can you?"

"I don't. I simply know that woman is man's superior."

FED WELL, BUT NOT WISELY.

A TRAMP KNOWS A GOOD THING WHEN HE TASTES IT.

Arrested for Making a Nuisance of Himself—Sent to Jail for Thirty Days—Says He is Coming Back When He Gets Out.

There was only one lone tramp that occupied the attention of the City Court this morning. He gave his name as Daniel Jones, and was arrested yesterday afternoon by Sergeant Kiely on West Seventh street between Central avenue and Liberty street, on the complaint of a number of residents in that neighborhood.

The charge was for being disorderly and begging from house to house. Last spring he was sent to the county jail for thirty days on the same charge, but returned as soon as he was released.

The Judge gave him sixty days and Captain Grant took him down to Elizabeth this morning. "Oh," said he to Sergeant Kiely, "I'm coming back as soon as I get out. They feed me too well on Seventh and Eighth streets to stay away."

For the Young Woman of Today.

The young woman of today is far better prepared to enter society and appear in the world if she is in a healthy condition. It is only within the last few years that exercise has been so broadly advised by physicians, but to physical improvement should be added gracefulness, and the two cannot better be united than in the course of physical culture and rendering that Miss Addie Parker Jackson teaches. Her classes were most successful last year, as was shown by the entertainment given in the spring, and this year she is again forming classes in these branches. Those who wish further information on this subject will find Miss Jackson at 512 Arlington avenue.

Surprised Her Niece.

There is nothing as enjoyable as a surprise party if it is a success, and the one given Miss J. Louise Jenkins by her aunt, Mrs. C. B. Clifton, of West Second street, last evening, was a perfect one. It was given in honor of her twenty-first birthday and was heartily enjoyed by all those present. the evening passed very enjoyably with music and conversation, while dainty refreshments added to the pleasure.

Found Floating in Newark Bay.

A bundle was discovered Sunday evening floating in Newark Bay, near the Central Railroad bridge, Elizabeth. It was picked up, and on opening it the body of a male child about two months old was found inside. The body was badly decomposed, and Morgue-keeper Jensen said it had been in the water about two months. County Physician O'Rielly held a post-mortem yesterday to determine whether the child died by violence.

No Rain in Somerset County.

J. C. Gulick, of Somerset county, was in town this morning and reports a shortage in the corn crop on account of the drought, no rain having fallen in six weeks. The other crops are doing well. The farmers of that region fear to sow their winter grain as the ground is so hard and dry.

Pure and Delicious.

"The Poisoned Gum Drop" might be a fit title for a dime novel, but it never could be one coming from Tier's, for his candies are as pure as they are delicious. He is now selling a special mixed candy at ten cents a pound. Another lot is going at fifteen cents. There are other bargains to numerous to mention.

A Running Race.

There will be a running race at the Gentlemen's Driving Park, Wednesday afternoon at five o'clock, between George Conover's horse "Rattler" and E. Giddis's bay mare "Fanny."

The Plaintiff Won.

The jury in the case of Haberle against the Babcock estate were not out very long yesterday and returned a verdict of $76.88 and costs for the plaintiff.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmrcy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

THEY'RE ALL FOR THE UNION.

No Feeling of Sectionalism Embitter the Southern Mind.

The fourteenth annual encampment of the Commandery-in-Chief of the Sons of Veterans, held in Knoxville, Tenn., from September 16th to 19th, was probably the most successful on record. Southern hospitality was very much in evidence, making the visit of the Sons of Veterans one of real pleasure, so much so that the very urgent invitation from the citizens of Louisville to meet in that city next year was accepted.

The business of the encampment was quickly dispatched, allowing the visitors plenty of time to visit the city and various points of interest surrounding Knoxville.

Nearly every place in the city was gaily decked in red, white and blue and anyone who previously had ideas as to feelings of sectionalism quickly had them removed, for the true, warm hearts of the people in Knoxville was sufficient evidence for all. Never in the history of the order has such recognition been extended. On several occasions a number of the governors from various States attended the meetings of the encampment and receptions were held.

As a result of the encampment the coming year gives promise of being the most successful in the order.

ONE ELOPER RETURNS.

And is Welcomed Back By the Faithful Husband—Not So With the Other.

The elopement that so startled the citizens of Washington Valley a few weeks ago, did not prove to be a happy one to those concerned. Mrs. Schofield has returned to her home, forgiven and welcomed back by her husband. VanNorton has not appeared as yet, however, and his wife says that he needn't come for she does not want him back.

What Advertising Does.

VanEmburgh & Son, who are liberal advertisers, told The Press this morning that they are more than ever convinced that newspaper advertisements are read and that the money they spend for newspaper advertising pays them. Friday and Saturday they told the people of Plainfield by their advertisement in The Daily Press that they had 700 gents linen collars on sale at five cents each, and sixty pairs of cuffs at ten cents a pair. Saturday evening, between seven and ten o'clock, they sold all the cuffs, and could have sold many more; they also sold between those hours over 400 of the collars. If you are not already an advertiser in The Daily Press what more evidence do you need that you should be.

Ready for Work.

It was not exactly football weather last evening, but over twenty men turned up at the practice game of the Y. M. C. A. football team in the gymnasium and indulged in a little light practice under the direction of the manager, Louis E. Waring. The tackling bag was used and proved of great benefit. A number of new candidates were present, and from present appearances, Plainfield is going to have a winning eleven this year. Practice will be continued Friday evening at the same place.

TRIED TO ROB UNCLE SAM.

AN ATTEMPT TO BURGLARIZE THE POSTOFFICE AT SOMERVILLE.

The Would-be Thieves Were Scared Away By the Night Watchman—Left Part of Their Tools—No Clue to Who They Were.

Uncle Sam was the proposed victim of two crooks at Somerville last night but he objected to the operation and the would-be thieves left without any booty.

It was about midnight and the watchman, whose rounds include the postoffice, was walking along when he noticed two shadowy figures flitting by the postoffice door. They seemed very busy at something and the watchman went to investigate. When the two men saw that they were watched one of the drew a revolver and fired and then both of the would-be thieves took to their heels and fled out into the darkness.

When the watchman came up to where they had been standing he found a heavy hammer, a brace and bit, and two chisels. They had not made any impression to the door as they were interrupted too quickly.

The police have no clue to the thieves as the watchman was unable to see what they looked like in his brief glance in the dark.

The Sewer Trench Again

The sewer trenches are the deadly enemies of wheelmen, and last evening John Keefe, the trusted assistant in the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company's store, came to the grief in one at the corner of Washington and East Fifth streets. He was riding down East Fifth street and saw the light in the middle of the road and, when he had almost reached it, crossed the street. The next thing he knew his pedals struck a pile of dirt and he was sent sprawling in the ditch. He struck his shoulder against a board on the way and is somewhat sore this morning.

When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

Mrs. Theodore Kurzhals, Sr., was in charge and introduced the several numbers.

At the conclusion of the entertainment the balance of the evening was devoted to dancing, the music for which was furnished by Frazee.

The committee who had charge of the affair consisted of Mrs. Snyder, Mrs. Demarest, Mrs. Terry and Mrs. Weigmann.

About midnight all retired to the banquet hall and enjoyed an excellent supper.

Mrs. Skidmore, a colored domestic in the employ of Wm. E. Day at 92 Duer street, on Sunday evening received a message from Rocky Hill conveying the sad intelligence that her son had been drowned during the afternoon while swimming in the Millstone river. He had taken a plunge in the water when overheated, and had an attack of cramps. He sank before he could be rescued. This is the second son that Mrs. Skidmore has lost by drowning. Accompanied by Mrs. Day, the afflicted woman went to Rocky Hill yesterday to attend the funeral and burial of her son.

The entertainment committee reported that an entertainment for the benefit of Hope chapel would be given on October 24th. Prof. Closs will act as entertainer and sing, dance and tell amusing stories.

TRIED THE DINING ROOM WINDOW.

An Attempted Robbery at a Liberty Street House Last Night.

An attempt at robbery was discovered at the residence of William Claassen, of Liberty street, this morning about 3:30 by one of the boarders in the house.

The boarder heard a noise and on looking out noticed a man attempting to raise the dining room window. He did not make any noise, thinking it best to notify a policeman

Before he could do this, however, a policeman near by sounded his club on the sidewalk. This frightened the robber, who made off. An examination was made, but nothing was missed. A dog in one of the lower rooms was found enjoying a piece of meat which no doubt was his reward for keeping quiet.

No clew as yet to the man's identity has been discovered.

Snapped An Axle.

Hardly a day passes without some kind of an accident caused by the car tracks. This morning, G. E. Cummings, of New Market, was the unlucky man. He was driving a white horse attached to a wagon on West Front street and started to turn out of the car tracks in front of White's. The wheels spread, and then the iron axle on the front of the wagon snapped like a stick of wood. The vehicle was drawn up to one side of the street, and John H. Carney, of Carney Brothers, repaired the break with a piece of pipe.

Wants to Wake the Dead.

The residents of Liberty street are treated to a fine assortment of yelling and calling every morning about 6 o'clock when a milkman passes through that thoroughfare. One of the residents of that neighborhood suggests that if he wishes to wake the dead with his yelling he would be more successful if he went down to Plainfield avenue by the cemetery. Several complaints have been made to the police and they are on the lookout for him. He is supposed to come from South Plainfield.

One Rider Has Tried It.

South Second street, west of Grant avenue, is in very poor condition, especially for cyclers. In one place, in the centre of the road, there is a hole which promises to do up the first wheelman that does not notice it at night. There is a sudden drop of about six inches and then a sudden rise. Wheelmen should look out for it when riding there at night.

He Showed Them How.

MUST PAY THE CARPENTERS.

THE SUIT OF OF HABERLE AGAINST THE BABCOCK ESTATE.

This Suit Will Probably Result in Instituting Seventeen Others—The Jury Was Out But a Very Short Time.

A large crowd assembled in the city court rooms yesterday and listened to a very interesting suit. Haberle, one of the eighteen carpenters who have been working on the Babcock building, was the plaintiff, and the Babcock estate the defendant. The suit was to recover wages due to Haberle when he worked on the Babcock building from July 6th to August 27th.

The carpenters had been instructed by J. F. Hubbard, one of the executors of the estate, after Chandler, the contractor, had refused to pay them, to continue at work and they would receive their pay all right. They did so, but when the time came no money was forthcoming, and so the suit was brought to secure $77.80, the amount due. Haberle's was to be a test case.

The suit was brought before Justice Newcorn and a jury of twelve men, consisting of H. Hand, G. W. Wood, C. M. Fine, James C. Totten, F. S. Bowman, L. P. Hoffman, James Miles, August Wolff, Calvin Neighbor, Samuel Moore, George Fisher and E. P. Baker.

Judge W. A. Coddington represented the tradesman and argued the case in a splendid manner. His remarks addressed to the jury were very forcible and were said by those present to be the best a Plainfield courtroom has heard for many a day.

He brought forward as his witnesses, three of the other carpenters, John Wyman, L. M. Dunavan and Andrew Mattis, who told their story very plainly.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh did not apparently have many arguments to bring forward, but those that he did have, he advanced in a strong speech.

The trial lasted from 10 o'clock in the morning until half past three in the afternoon, when Justice Newcorn charged the jury.

After fifteen minutes consultation they brought out a verdict of the full amount of damages for the plaintiff.

Thorn, for a license to open the place just across the bridge on Somerset street that Charles Bock owns and for which Bock applied and the court laid over for one year at the last April term of court.

Fleischhauer Drug Store Closed.

Fleischhauer on East Front street was closed this morning by Mrs. Fleischhauer, and a notice with her name signed to it, reading "Closed temporarily" was posted on the front door. RACE IN '96 ASSURED

Official Notice from the Royal Yacht Club.

Rose's Cup Hunter Will Be a 89-Footer, Designed by J. M. Soper, and Will Be Called the Distant Shore—No New Conditions Will Be Asked, It Is Stated.

London, Sept. 24.—J. M. Soper, the yacht designer, came to London yesterday afternoon and had a conference with Charles Day Rose regarding the details of the yacht with which it is proposed to challenge for the America's cup. It was agreed to communicate with the secretary of the Royal Victoria Yacht club, and that official cabled as follows: "The formal challenge by mail will follow, and will read: 'In behalf of the Royal Victoria Yacht club and in the name of C. D. Rose, a member, the club challenges to sail a series of matches for the America's cup, against any yacht or vessel built in the United States. The following are the particulars: Challenger's owner, C. D. Rose; name of yacht, the Distant Shore; length on load-water line, 89 feet; rig, cutter. The challenge will be absolutely unconditional.'"

New York Yachtsmen Pleased.

New York, Sept. 24.—Ex-commodore James D. Smith, chairman of the America's cup committee, said this morning that he was greatly pleased at the challenge, and said that there was no doubt in his mind that the race would be sailed to a finish next year. In regard to the conditions Commodore Smith could say nothing. He did not know whether Mr. Rose meant that the conditions under which the races were sailed this year were satisfactory and that he wanted the same committee to act, or whether he meant to say that any conditions made by the committee would be satisfactory. In any event he believed that a race could be sailed without friction, and it would probably be sailed in August or perhaps late in July, the ten months required under the deed of gift expiring in the latter month. All yachtsmen seen were highly delighted at the assurance of another race in 1896.

No Change in the Course.

There is no likelihood that the race will be sailed anywhere else than in New York harbor if the committee continue of the same mind as when they last met. Some arrangements can doubtless be made to prevent crowding on the course; members of the committee think it may be necessary to try to get legislation on the subject. Yachtsmen spoken to this morning were greatly surprised that an eighty-nine foot boat is to be sent over. It has been the general impression that a smaller yacht would be sent.

IN DURRANT'S DEFENSE

Mysterious Witnesses Will Try To Upset the Prosecution's Case.

San Francisco, Sept. 24.—Several witnesses will, it is said, go on the stand in Durrant's defense, to prove that Minnie Belle Edwards, May Lannigan, Mrs. Dorgan and others who testified to seeing Durrant and Blanche Lamont together were confused in their dates. One of the witnesses is said to be a man who rode on the same car with Mrs. Crossett on the day she journey across the city to the mission, and it is alleged that he, too, rembered that the trip was taken on another day than April 3. None of these witnesses' names can be learned, and interested parties doubt their existence.

MAY SAVE RIS-EYESIGHT.

Convict Perry Now Submits to Treatment Without Chloroform.

Auburn, N. Y., Sept. 24.—Oliver Curtis Perry is still confined in one of the isolated cells in the new building and has the distinction of being the first occupant of these special cells. He is now willing to submit to treatment for his self-punctured eyes without the use of chloroform, and it is thought that the sight has not been permanently destroyed. Perry's isolation is considered a good move all around. While in the north wing he caused no end of annoyance by hoots and howls in an attempt to start a general chorus of yells among the convicts. Where he is at present his cries are unheeded and unheard. He shouts for the warden, for the chaplain, for better food, for better accommodations, and above all he wants to go home. Before the train robber tried to blind himself he told of his antipathy for the officials at Matteawan. "I wish I had murdered one of them," he said fiercely, and then added with a wicked leer and cunning reasoning, "They could not have killed me for I was mad." There is a general belief that application will be made to the superintendent of state prisons for the retransfer of Perry to Matteawan asylum.

POSTAL AFFAIRS.

Report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

Washington, Sept. 24.—Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Maxwell's report for the fiscal year ended June 30 last is one of the earliest to be presented, as was the case last year. It indicates 13,000 new appointments of fourth-class postmasters made within the year, only 769 of them having been occasioned by death which is exactly the same number as last year. During the year the greatest increase in the number of postoffices was in Oklahoma, 69. Virginia follows with 66, and Indian Territory with 60. Nineteen states show a decrease in the number of postoffices, the greatest loss occurring in Kansas, fifty-three, South Carolina losing 44, and West Virginia 38 each. Nearly sixty thousand complaints regarding ordinary mail matter were received and disposed of during the year by the inspectors division. The concluding pages of the report refer to several very important arrests of postoffice swindlers.

ENGLISH CRICKETERS WIN.

Redeem One Defeat by Beating the Gentlemen of Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Sept. 24.—The Oxford-Cambridge cricketers redeemed their defeat by the University of Pennsylvania by beating the Gentlemen of Philadelphia in the match which has been in progress since Friday and which ended yesterday afternoon. The Philadelphians scored 234 runs in their first inning and 138 in their second—a total of 372. The Englishmen made 156 runs in their first inning, and when they went in yesterday for their second inning they wanted 317 runs to win. They scored 220 runs with two wickets to spare. The heat throughout the match was terrific and was seriously felt by the players of both teams, but more especially by the Englishmen.

The Little English Yacht Loses the Race with the Ethelwynn.

Centre Island, L. In the windward work the Ethelwynn stood up to the puffs quite as well as her rival, and while in running free the honors were with Spruce, yet on the latter point of sailing the tiny boats were evenly matched.

Coming Visit of President Faure to the Czar's Country—France To Aid Russia in Corea, in Return for Which Russia Will Assist France Against England in Egypt.

Berlin, Sept. 24.—With reference to the report that President Faure had decided to visit St. Petersburg next spring, and had arranged with the Russian foreign minister a grand demonstration of the united French, Russian and Danish fleets at Copenhagen, the Paris correspondent of the Lokal-Anzeiger telegraphs that President Faure will be escorted by a French squadron to Copenhagen, whence, after visiting the king and queen of Denmark, he will proceed to St. Petersburg and thence to Moscow to attend the ceremonies of the coronation of Czar Nicholas II. During his stay in Russia President Faure will be lodged in the imperial palace. He will return by sea visiting en route the Swedish and Dutch sovereigns.

To Assist Each Other.

The correspondent also says that M. Hanataux, the French minister of foreign affairs, and Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky, the Russian foreign minister, who is now visiting France, have agreed regarding Armenian and East Asian affairs. France it is said, will support Russia's inevitable attempts to oust the Japanese from Corea, in return for which Russia will aid France in her attempts to dislodge the British from Egypt.

CALL FOR DR. TALMAGE

Washington Presbyterians Make Him an Offer.

Requested To Act as Co-Pastor with Rev. Dr. Sunderland—No Fixed Salary Mentioned, But a Pledge Given That It Shall Be an Amount Mutually Satisfactory.

Washington, Sept. 24.—At a meeting of the congregation of the First Presbyterian church, known as the president's church, the following was sent to the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage of Brooklyn calling him to the associate pastorship with Rev. Dr. Byron Sunderland: "The congregation of the First Presbyterian church of Washington being on sufficient grounds well satisfied of the ministerial qualifications of you and having good hopes from our knowledge of your past eminent labors that your ministrations in the gospel will be profitable to our spiritual interests, do earnestly, unanimously and heartily, not one voice dissenting, call and desire you to undertake the office of co-pastor in said congregation, promising you in the discharge of your duty all proper support, encouragement and obedience in the Lord. And that you may be free from all worldly cares and avocations considering your well and wide known ability and generosity, we do not assume to specify any definite sum of money for your recompense, but we do hereby promise, pledge and oblige ourselves to pay to you such sums of money and at such times as shall be mutually satisfactory during the time of your being and remaining in the relation to said church to which we do hereby call you." The conditions upon which the call was issued are that Dr. Sunderland is not to withdraw, and the co-pastor, Dr. Adolos Allen, is not to be disturbed in his position, but may resign at his option, and with consent of the church. Dr. Talmage is to have exclusive charge of the Sunday evening services, while Drs. Sunderland and Allen are to divide the services during the week. The call was mailed last night, and as Dr. Talmage will accept at once it is expected he will be here in time to preach his initial sermon in this city next Sunday night.

PALACE OF THE POPES.

The Historic Structure at Avignon To Be Restored.

London, Sept. 24.—The daily News today publishes a dispatch from Paris saying that the town council of Avignon, acting upon a suggestion of Deputy Pourquery de Boisserin, who is mayor of the city, has voted carte blanche for the restoration of the historical Palace of the Popes which has long been used as barracks. It is estimated that the work of restoration will cost 4,250,000 francs. It is proposed to convert the palace into a museum of Christendom. A prominent resident of the city declares that the sacred college will elect the next pope from Avignon where he will reside.

THE REPORT DENIED.

Cruiser Barbaistegui Not Sunk by a Rebel Torpedo.

Philadelphia, Sept. 24.—Dr. Jose Congosto, Spanish consul at this port, denies the report that the Spanish crusier Barcaistegui, which was sunk with a loss of forty-six lives last Wednesday in the harbor of Havana, was destroyed by a torpedo launched against her by venturesome insurgents. He declares the original account of the collision with the merchant steamer Mortera is true, and gives the narrative of the accident in the words of the Mortera's commander, Captain Vinal. Representative Cubans in this city refuse to say anything on the subject of the sinking of the cruiser. Captain Vinal's deposition, which was made last Thursday, is as follows:

The Captain's Story.

"Yesterday at 11.15 o'clock when about two miles from the entry of the port of Havana and going with a moderate speed, I distinguished in front and on the starboard side a green light, which I supposed belonged to a boat that was leaving the port. I gave orders to lessen speed, and I heard two blasts of the Sanchez Barcaistegui's whistle to which I answered. Later, in turning to enter the harbor, and, having the green light continually on the starboard side, I again blew my steam whistle twice, to give notice that I was entering the harbor. All of a sudden the lights of the cruiser disappeared. I merely gave orders to reverse engines at full speed. But it was useless. The collision took place. I gave orders to lower our boats and to thrown all our life preservers overboard. For some time after the collision our spars and rigging were entangled with that of the Barcaistegui, and as the situation was very dangerous for both vessels, I gave orders to go ahead with the idea of pushing the cruiser upon shore. Soon I saw I could not accomplish this without great danger to my own ship. We then withdrew from the injured cruiser, and she sank immediately."

HOLMES IN COURT.

The Accused Murderer To Be Tried on October 28.

Philadelphia, Sept. 24.—Herman W. Mudgett, alias H. H. Holmes, was arraigned before Judge Finletter in the court of oyer and terminer yesterday on the indictment charging him with the murder of Benjamin F. Pietzel in this city on September 2, 1894. Upon the advice of his counsel the prisoner pleaded not guilty. District Attorney Graham asked that Monday, October 28, be fixed for the beginning of the trial. Holmes' counsel objected to this date, but the judge, after hearing argument on both sides, stated that he thought October 28 would give the defense sufficient time in which to prepare its case. He then ordered that the trial be set down for that day, with the understanding that when the time arrived neither side could expect to come into court and obtain a continuance on palty excuses.

NEW YORK DEMOCRATS

State Convention in Session at Syracuse To-day.

No Slate and No Cut and Dried Policy, But Platform, Candidates and Contests To Be Fought Out on the Floor of the Convention—Heated Time Promised.

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 24.—The great unterrified, the democracy of the Empire state, slept but little last night and with brass bands and a hurrah kept things lively. Crowds fill the streets, flags fly from house tops, bunting is plentifully and as for enthusiasm, and candidates, there is a surplus of both. Red fire burned in front of Tammany's headquarters last night and the hotel lobbies were packed with perspiring politicans. Of all recent conventions the one which meets this morning promises to be the most interesting. It will be a convention run by the delegates. There was no slate with an invincible machine behind it when the convention convened and no cut and dried programme.

Strife Is Assured.

Platform and candidates and the contests will be fought over on the floor of the convention. There will be strife between Tammany and the state democracy and strife that will be more lurid than the glare of red fire in front of the tiger's lair last night. Sentiment all over the state seems to favor liberal treatment of contestants, and at least partial recognition for the Grace-Fairchild people of New York city, but Tammany says "No," and to all entreaties and appeals Tammany entered the convention saying "No."

Excise and Sunday Opening.

Senator Hill is for admitting the Grace men. Senator Murphy is for shutting them out. Richard Croker is not here but his influence is felt and it is all against letting in the men who helped defeat Tammany last year. Upon the admission of the state democracy depends in a large measure the action of the German-Americans. Another great question to be settled which will affect the German vote is that of excise and Sunday opening. From all that can be learned the issue will not be dodged, but the democrats will make the most radical utterance that has found its way into a party platform in some time.

The Platform.

The platform will be one of the tersest that has been presented to any democratic state convention since 1874. It will cover more ground than any platform in the past twenty years and the great variety of subjects treated will be concisely disposed of. It will declare for honest public officials and against legislative bribery. Economy in public expenditures will be dwelt upon at length as one of the foundation stones of the democratic party. A demand will be made that all laws shall meet with equal enforcement and that there shall be no enforcement of one law to the exclusion of others equally important. Home rule for municipalities and equal taxation will be upheld in separate planks.

Home Rule and Local Option.

Under the head of "Personal liberty of the individual" the democratic party will declare for home rule and local option as regards the Sunday laws. This plank will, in effect, place the party in favor of a general law with a provision that local option may be possible in a municipality or community by a majority vote, so that the people may determine themselves what access they shall have to the necessities and conveniences of life on the Sabbath day.

Financial Plank.

The financial plank will demand an agreement among foreign powers for the common use of gold and silver, and, at the same time, declare against the unlimited coinage of silver until such an agreement can be brought about. The national administration will be endorsed, as well as the operations of the Wilson tariff law.

The Candidates.

A number of new candidates loomed up during the night, and some of the men who have been spoken of as candidates dropped out of sight. Slates were made and broken a dozen times. The Kings county men disclaimed responsibility for the Horatio C. King boom. He was tipped as the Hill candidate for secretary of state. Frank Campbell, who was talked of as a promising candidate for comptroller, announced officially that he is not a candidate. Judge Parker is said to have declared positively that he will not accept the nomination for justice of the court of appeals. Gen. P. C. Doyle, of Buffalo, who was suggested for secretary of state, said he was not a candidate for a nomination, as Erie county can hope for only one man on the ticket, and all Erie is for Augustus F. Scheu for comptroller. Charles A. Cary, of Olean, is still in the race for secretary of state, and if Gen. King is withdrawn he may get the place. For treasurer the leading candidate is John B. Judson of Gloversville. The Schoharie men are for DeWitt Clinton Dow for state treasurer. For attorney general there seems to be a common agreement that D. C. Griffin of Watertown is to be named. If Theodore W. Myers of New York will permit his name to be used for comptroller, he will probably get the place. Augustus F. Scheu will get it if Myers is out of the way. Jacob Gerling of Monroe is in the race for the place and also John F. Ashe of Fonda, Andrew C. Field of Westchester and ex-Senator Norton Chase of Albany and a few others. For county judge J. D. Teller of Auburn seems to be in the lead. For state engineer and surveyor, George Clinton Ward of Oneida has the best chance. Russell R. Stuart of Syracuse and G. C. Ward of Booneville will also be placed in nomination.

The Yacht Annie B. Safe.

Amesbury, Mass., Sept. 24.—The report current here yesterday that the yacht Annie B., owned by Howard Bartlett of this place, was the one wrecked at Kittery bridge Friday night proves to be untrue. Mr. Bartlett arrived with his yacht early yesterday.

Think of it. Two boys are reported to have frozen to death in Wyoming while we were sweltering in the record-breaking weather.

In Norway and Sweden before a couple can be legally married certificates must be produced showing that both the bride and bridegroom have been satisfactorily vaccinated.

A Plainfield girl was last week married under a bower of golden-rod. Elizabeth girls will allow no suggestion of a rod when they marry, either golden or any other kind.—Elizabeth Journal.

Rochester's new ballot machines will cost the city $32,917, but it is claimed that they will make a saving in election expenses of $6,000 yearly. All the ballot clerks will be dispensed with, and all the expenses of twenty-two polling places be saved.

City Judge Coddington did a commendable act in holding police court last Sunday. There were four culprits locked up in this apology for a station-house, and while a little incarceration would doubtless do the most of them good, the fact that the thermometer was close to the 100 degree mark was ample reason that they should be given as speedy a hearing as possible. To lock a man up in one of the dingy, four by six, whitewashed cells, in this alleged station-house for two days without a hearing is almost atrocious, and especially when the weather was such as it was on Sunday. The police station is a disgrace to the city.

Municipal ownership of street railways and of electric railway and lighting plants is making steady progress in Great Britain. According to a letter in the New York Tribune Manchester, Oldham, Huddersfield, Bradford, Glasgow, Brighton, and other cities, have established electric lighting plants under municipal ownership and management. In Glasgow and Manchester this policy has been markedly successful. In Bradford a return of ten per cent. has been made to the town treasury upon the capital invested, after payments have been provided for the sinking fund. In many English and Scotch cities the municipal goverment retains control over the roadway, constructs and owns the tramway, and either operates it as a branch of the town service or leases it to the highest bidder with guarantees of remunerative rentals, low fares and satisfactory accommodation for the public. In Leeds, the town council purchased the property of the street car lines—horses, engines, cars and stations—for $650,000, and brought them under direct municipal management. The wages of the operatives were advanced, and their working hours were shortened. Fares were reduced, the rolling stock was improved, and the traffic enormously increased. There is a strong movement in rural communities for the construction of light or electric railways at the expense of ratepayers for the benefit of the farming classes, and Parliamentary legislation is eagerly awaited for that purpose.

Sewers a Good Ways Off.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—An item in your issue of the 12th inst., calling attention to the special election for or against a borough in a portion of Fanwood, intimates that one of the objects of the promoters of the borough movement is the construction of sewers. As to this you were misinformed. The fact is thoroughly realized here that, because of its extended area in proportion to population and property valuation, our citizens will have to await the growth of years before they can enjoy the luxury of sewers.

IN FALL MONTHS

Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Can Now Be Cured.

Old Time Obstinate Diseases Are Easily Curable.

Paine's Celery Compound is the Great Specific.

It Restores the Neglected, Famished Nerve Parts.

It Replaces Worn-Out Tissues With New, Vigorous Ones.

Paine's celery compound is the one assured remedy for rheumatism and neuralgia that is every day accomplishing all that physicians claim for it!

Both these old time, obstinate diseases are today speedily and permanently cured by Prof. Edward E. Phelps' great prescription.

Neuralgia and rheumatism are merely names for a reduced state of the nervous tissues. As far as causes go, they do not much differ from nervous debility, headaches, dyspepsia and sleeplessness.

The mischief is the same in every case, a nervous system robbed of life and substance by over exertion and scanty nutrition. The cure for all these is likewise in the same direction. Strengthen and restore the nerves to their normal condition with Paine's celery compound.

It is the advice of the ablest physicians everywhere.

As soon as all the countless nerve centers and fibers have been made sound and strong, not only rheumatism and neuralgia, but low spirits, kidney trouble, disordered liver and heart palpitation, vanish without a trace to remind one that their presence was not all a fearful dream.

Paine's celery compound does its curative work in a simple, straightforward way. It wastes little time on the minute and puzzling classification of diseases, but bends all its energies at once to feeding the worn-out, shattered nervous track, filling the arteries with rich, new blood, and building up the body to fight against disease.

Low spirits lose their power when the system feels the buoyancy of returning health, such as soon comes from taking Paine's celery compound. The rapid gain in weight that follows its use is a reasonable indication of the strengthening processes that are going on among the vital organs.

Many men and women who recommend Paine's celery compound do so in what, to others, may sometimes seem extravagant words. But Paine's celery compound has made them well.

At Music Hall Tonight.

"In the depicting of intensified remorse, Carl A. Haswin gave most admirable proof of being a strong actor, and carried with him the strong sympathy of the audience. The acting in this scene was undoubtedly the gem of the evening. From this out he has a sympathy which, up to that time, as a drunken spendthrift he had failed to obtain. Upon his return from America his meeting with his little daughter and his faithful old servant afforded an opportunity for powerful acting, which Mr. Haswin did not neglect to improve. His recitation of the horrors of a murderer's sleeping hours was fearfully vivid. In fact the entire play abounds in strong situations, and the play itself is one of the most powerful if not the very strongest that has been put upon the stage here this season."—Boston Journal, February 29th.

EXPLAINED.

People of this day and generation are not disposed to give things away. When therefore the Mount Lebanon Shakers recently stated that any one could get a bottle of Digestive Cordial by calling in person at their New York office, it excited a great deal of talk.

One of the leading dailies of the Metropolis sent a reporter to find out what was meant. It developed that the preparation in question has proven beneficial in so large a majority of cases that nine-tenths of the people who are sufficiently anxious to call for a sample, find so much relief that they continue the product's use and tell their friends about it. As a result a very large demand has been created.

The Shakers have a long record of success as inventors and their various medicinal products have always enjoyed a high reputation. The Digestive Cordial is not only nourishing in in itself but it digests other foods when taken as directed.

Sleepless nights, spots before the eyes and a sense of heaviness after eating, loss of weight and general weakness are among the common symptons of indigestion which it promptly relieves, and it is gratifying to know that such a positive and harmless remedy as the Digestive Cordial should have at last been devised.

In order to find whether the Shaker Digestive Cordial is adapted to your case try a small bottle. Its effect is immediate. For sale by nearly all druggists.

A Surprise and Dance.

A very pleasant surprise party was given to Miss Maggie Falker, of Smalleytown, last evening, in honor of her seventeenth birthday. About sixty were present and the evening was spent most enjoyably in dancing. Prof. O'Reilly furnished the music. An elaborate supper was served at twelve o'clock. A stage load of young people from this city attended the party.

STRIFE IN MADISON STREET.

The Kanes, Shannons, Phelans and Claxtons at War.

It came to the police court in this way:

Mrs. Shannon and Mrs. Kane had a few words over a coal bucket which each claimed. Mrs. Shannon said that Mrs. Kane had used her water bucket for the transportation of coal. Mrs. Kane said that Mrs. Shannon was mistaken, but she didn't say it in exactly those words. Mrs. Shannon said that Mrs. Kane was herself a person of no rightful claims to truthfulness, stating this observation in succinct form not wholly devoid of an element of profanity. Mrs. Kane thereupon called Mrs. Shannon out of her name.

"Yer no leddy," averred Mrs. Shannon with emphasis.

"Who's no leddy?" shrieked Mrs. Kane, horrified for the moment at the insult.

"Yer no leddy," repeated the other with added emphasis.

"Och! wirra, wirra," moaned Bob Kane's wife. "Yez wouldn't lay your tongue to that word if my man was here."

"Bob Kane's an Irish loafer," declared Mrs. Shannon.

"Yez'r Irish yerself."

"Who's Irish?"

"Yez'r Irish; yez'r from Kilkenny, an' yer feyther had but the wan pig that ate at th' fam'ly table, an' by th' same token he was dacenter than anny Shannon before nor since."

"I'm Kilkenny, I'm proud of it," shouted Mrs. Shannon. "As for your sinnywations—take that!"

Bing! went Mrs. Shannon's right fist.

"An' yez take that!" Bang! sounded Mrs. Kane's left.

All the neighbors came out to enjoy the fun when an entirely uncalled for interruption came in the person of Bob Kane himself. Testimony differs as to whether Bob did really throw Mrs. Shannon down stairs and jump on her, or only used the mild methods of knocking her over with a chair and dragging her about the hallway by her left foot. At any rate somebody hit Bob, and several other somebodies followed suit, and that night there was a smell of liniment from the top floor.

Everybody concerned was in court a day or two later. It was popularly supposed that Bob Kane was responsible for their being summoned there, and there were charges and counter charges until the Magistrate's hair stood on end. Finally everybody concurred in an agreement to let the matter rest, which suited the confused Magistrate immensely. Perhaps it wouldn't have suited him quite so well had he understood the tacit sub-agreement that the dispute should be settled in primitive fashion when the combatants returned to Madison street. They returned, and that same night, by a strange coincidence, the Kane's pet cat hurlted through the quiet air, and bounded merrily from fire escape to window sill and from window sill to clothes line, and so on to the ground.

"Wa-a-a-a-a-a-aour," wailed the cat as she landed.

"I kin break th' face off th' mon, male or female, thot trun thot poor cat out th' windy," howled Bob Kane, as he descended after the household pet.

"Shut up," said a voice from above. Don't be disturbin' folks with your racket."

"I'll have th' law on yez," retorted Kane. "I know yez."

But the last statement was probably beyond the truth, for next day Kane got summonses in the police court for about two dozen of his fellow tenants—men and women, charging them with having maltreated his cat. He took a day off to serve the papers. First he went to Mrs. Dennis Stevenson's room and kicked on the door.

"Here's some papers for yez, Mrs. Stevenson," he said when that lady made her appearance.

Mrs. Stevenson regarded him auspiciously. She reached out a gingerly hand and closed her fingers around it as if she feared it was hot.

"I ain't lookin' fer no favors from youse, Bob Kane. More betoken, I can't read 'em widout me glasses," said she.

"No, nor wid 'em," retorted he, impolitely. "All yez hov t' do is t' come to the court beyant t' morry or yez'll go up fer six mont's."

The Doolans and the Kellys and the Carneys and the Phelans were duly served with the papers, and then Kane tackled the three Claxtons, who live on the top floor, and are called by the disrespectful the "mixed ale maids." Miss Nellie, the elder, came to the door and found Kane holding out a paper.

"I'll give to no subscription," she declared.

"'Tis not a subscription," returned Kane.

"Maybe it's a letter," suggested Miss Nellie.

"Maybe it's a mixed ale growler, and then again, maybe it ain't," retored he. "I serve yez wid it," and he placed it on her shoulder, whence it fluttered on the ground.

One eye of Bob Kane's blinked visibly at Magistrate Brann in the Tombs Court on the following morning. If the other did any blinking it was obscured by the bandage he wore. All the neighbors were there, bearing their summonses aloft where they couldn't escape notice. Kane claimed consideration on the ground that he was a good reformer.

"These Tammany tarriers have been tryin' t' do me up," he told the Magistrate.

Politics didn't figure here, however. To his great disgust Kane presently found himself the defendant in a charge of disorderly conduct, for which a severe rebuk was meted out to him.—New York Sun.

The Billop Mystery

By Julian Hawthorne

CHAPTER I.

(Copyright, 1895, by Irving Bacheller.)

On the wall opposite, as I sit at my study table, hangs a small picture framed in white. Though but a sketch in water-color, it shows the handling of a master; and if the observer be a connoisseur, he will recognize the touch of Winslow Homer. The subject is a New England farm-house among the hills: time, sunset of an October day.

The house, as you see, occupies the summit of an acclivity. Its broad hip-roof, its blunt gables, and its massive chimney stand out against the sky. The orange light from the west illuminates the venerable front, and glows on its deep-set windows. Two trees of unknown age and vast size stand one on either side of the heavily-framed doorway. That on the right is a butternut; the other is an elm; and in the apparently still solid trunk of the former (as I happen to know, though it could not be represented in Mr. Homer's sketch) is still embedded a bullet fired from a flintlock musket in the hands of an Indian, one hundred and eighty years ago. The bullet was meant for the stout heart of Mistress Nancy Billop, who, with her two sons, was defending the house against a raid of the savages during the absence of her husband on a trading trip to the coast. For the house, as well as the trees, stood there in 1715, looking, probably, not very different from what they do now. You may be glad to know that the Indians were beaten off, after three of them had been shot dead while unsuccessfully trying to set the building on fire; and the valiant little garrison was relieved betimes next morning. I mention this episode merely to give you an idea what sort of stuff these Billops had in them. Be we democratic as we may, we cannot help liking our friends the better for descending from stock like that.

TWO TREES OF UNKNOWN AGE.

Let us now make a skip of a century and a half or so, during which the Billops generations succeeded one another in a steady, honorable, but somewhat uneventful career of prosperity; raising crops, breeding cattle, sending a representative to the wars, when there were any, and voting for that form of government which stands for liberty, security, and minding your own business.

The original Billop was a pioneer in that region, and owned everything in sight from his windows. When, in course of time, other settlers came along, he had treated them hospitably, and bid them help themselves to anything they wanted in the way of farms, up to within a radius of a mile from his door-step. The land within that radius got to be known as Billop's farm; and it contained the finest land—upland pasture, forest, and meadow—to be found in the neighborhood. Early in the century, about half of this farm was sold to a man by the name of Corvin. We have business with some of his posterity in the present narrative.

The house which Corvin built stood halfway between the old Billop homestead and the village of Fenbrook, (which had been in gradual course of materialisation since before the Revolutionary war.) Corvin was a lawyer. He brought money with him, and made more. He was a pushing, shrewd man, and before his death had served a term in the State legislature. His son adopted the profession of law also, but did not make out so well with it. He seemed to lack the gift of success. Being, upon a time, in straits, he got a considerable loan of money. Now, no details as to this loan were known, but it was the general impression that it came from Matthew Billop, the then head of the Billop clan, with whom Corvin was understood to be on rather intimate terms. What security did Corvin give for it? What was there for him to give, except a mortgage on his land? It was not known what use he made of the loan; but there were indications that he never paid interest on it, and it was only a question of time, therefore, when it would be foreclosed. For Matthew Billop was not the sort of man to give up his just dues to anybody.

This Matthew is known in local history as Miser Billop. He was the last male of his race, and perhaps the ablest of any of them. For reasons best known to himself, he never married. He had two sisters, one of whom, Sally, married John Linton, and died a year after, followed several years later by her husband; the other, Nancy, remained an old maid, and kept house for Matthew. We shall have the pleasure of her nearer acquaintance shortly. I will only observe here that she was in love, in her salad days, with a certain good-looking, easy-going young fellow by the name of Brent. Brent, being more good-looking than otherwise good, jilted her, and married her bosom friend, Mary Selwin. The pair went to New Orleans, had a daughter, and then both died of yellow fever. Nancy might have said "Serve 'em right!" but she did not, not being that sort of a woman. But she had the little girl brought up north, and took care of her, and made her a daughter of her own. Betrayed by both her lover and her friend, she loved their little Nellie all the more tenderly for their sakes.

This transaction took place about 1870. Now, Sally, before her death, had presented her husband with a son, Thomas; and this Thomas became an orphain at almost the date of the New Orleans tragedy. Thomas was eight or nine years Nellie's senior. It will not surprise any one to learn than Nancy adopted him also; being her own nephew, and destitute, she could hardly do less. Thus, although an old maid, she was provided, at the age of (say) five and thirty, with a son and a daughter, whom she cherished and indulged as only an old-maid mother can. But how did Miser Matthew like these proceedings?

Why, nobody knows; for Miser Matthew had died the year before the proceedings took place. When I say that he died, however, I speak hastily. I should have said, he disappeared. As he never reappeared, and sent no messages, it was finally assumed that dead he must be. And since his disappearance (or death) happened to occur at the very period when that mortgage of Corvin's would naturally have been foreclosed: and since no trace of a deed of mortgage, or anything else referring to affairs with Corvin was discovered among his papers: and (finally) since the last time he was seen alive was the evening he left home, after telling Nancy that he was going down to have a chat with Corvin:—why, people were free to form their own opinions; and they did so. But if their opinions had any sinister significance—if, for example, they leant towards connecting the vanished man's fate with the fact that Corvin was thereby relieved of the necessity of losing most of his wordly possessions—nothing ever came of them; because nothing ever transpired to indicate that Corvin knew of or had a hand in the taking off of his creditor. On the contrary, he was quite active in searching for him. But Matthew had gone out of sight like a soap-bubble, leaving not a trace behind him.

Hitherto you will have observed that there has been a good deal of chronology and genealogy. But there is no need of punctually remembering them. They were introduced merely to provide a background and an atmosphere for the events of the story itself. Stories of mystery, such as this is, need backgrounds and atmospheres in order to produce their full effect. Little except mystery will be found in what is to follow; and if you are able to sound the depths of it before the evolution of events brings it to light, all I can say is that you are cleverer than the present chronicler was at the time, or than any of the neighbors. Meanwhile you will appreciate Mr. Homer's artistic purpose in enveloping his sketch in that dreamy, mysterious, Indian-summer haze. Is there not something ghostly in that wreath of mist stealing along the middle distance, behind the big butternut tree?

I should have mentioned another reason for the local suspicions of Mr. Corvin. We have seen that Matthew was a wealthy man; his money was invested chiefly in real estate and railroads. But it became known that, shortly before his disappearance, he had been calling-in these investments, and turning them into hard cash, with the design of putting the money in certain Western enterprises that paid a higher interest. He must, then, have had a great many thousand dollars actually in his hands; for there was no trace of his having deposited any of it in the local banks. What had become of it? Like himself, it had dissolved, every dollar of, into thin air. It was gone; but, on the other hand, Mr. Corvin soon after began to show symptoms of decided solvency. His luck took a turn; he was looking up in the world, at last. Instead of forfeiting his estate to the Billops, he presently found himself in a position to add some of the Billops acres to his own. Nancy, being so unexpectedly reduced in circumstances, and having no more head for business than a hen, was thankful to exchange parcels of her land for a little cash. The neighbors shook their heads; but what could they do? or say even, above their breaths? Corvin was a lawyer, and a hard one; he would have been down on any one of them to whom he could trace an insinuation against his perfect integrity. They might think what they liked; but he was much more apt to put them in goal for libel than they were to get him hanged for murder. They had not even a corpus delicti.

What they did venture to say was, that Corvin meant bit by bit to possess of himself of the entire Billop estate, house and all, and turn poor Nancy out to shift for herself. For it was remembered that at the time Nancy had been betrothed to Brent, Corvin had himself been paying attentions to her; and that he had taken the rebuff very ill. Of course, his marriage with Miser Billop's sister would have been the making of him. He had married another girl immediately afterwards; but he was of a temper to cherish grudges; and now that he had his chance, he meant to satisfy it.

Thus do the guilty triumph in this world, and there is no help for it. In this case, though, one hope was still indulged by a few of the more innocent and credulous of the community. It was recalled that, during the lifetime of Matthew, the Billop house was believed to be haunted. Matthew's spirit, instead of adding to the supernatural crew, however, had apparently taken the existent ghosts away with it; at all events, the manifestations had come to a stop with his disappearance. But it was plausibly argued that a house which has once been haunted, is likely to be haunted again; indulgence in spirits clings to a house just as it does to a man. Now (argued these philosophers) although Matthew's immaterial part might very well forebear to disturb the peace of his good sister, who had never done anybody any harm, but who was mortally afraid of disembodied intelligencies; yet the saturnine old miser, foreseeing the future, might by only bidding his time, and saving up his energies to harry the man who had shed his blood, so soon as the latter should venture to set foot in his ancient domicile. Yes, he would haunt Lawyer Corvin as never lawyer had been haunted before; and it would go hard but the whole secret of the murder, if murder there had been—would be revealed, the lost money recovered, and Nancy reinstated once more in her own.

Certainly, that would be poetical justice, and things as strange are said to have happened. We shall see what did happen, shortly.

CHAPTER II.

Few houses were better adapted for the accommodation of ghosts than the old Billop homestead. Tho two mighty trees cast a shadow over it even at noonday; and its cavernous cellar and Daedalian garret seemed ideal stamping-grounds for spectres. The acclivity on which the house stood—the site had been chosen with an eye to its defensibility in Indian times—sloped gently down in front but fell away quite abruptly behind and at the sides. On the right side, almost beneath the roots of the butternut tree, a small natural cave entered the rocky soil; it had been artificially enlarged so as to shelter the farm wagons and tools when the barn was overfull of produce. The barn stood further down the slope, near the meadow, and was itself a delightfully mysterious and scary place; both the cave and the barn had been highly prized by generations of Billop children, as well as by their mothers when, in rainy weather, they wanted to have some peace in the house. "May we play in the barn, or the cave, mother?" was a request seldom refused. Sometimes, no doubt, the children played ghosts, till they were ready to expire with delightful creeps and horrors, and thus confirmed among themselves the weird legends which came down from generation to generation.

When Tom Linton, aged eleven, took up his abode at the house, Nellie Brent was a mere baby, just able to walk and utter a few Orphic words; so he had to do the most of his playing by himself. But he was a boy of unusual resources and genius; and as his tenacy of the premises was unfortunately, brief, and his fate grievous, we must make him as distinct as possible while he lasts. He had the energy and vitality of a whole school at noon recess, and was as sensational and indomitable in his manifestations as were Robin Hood and his merry men in Sherwood forest. He neither feared ghosts nor believed in them; but his noises and surprises were more terrible than a battalion of the disincarnate. He was on the jump from morning till night, arms, legs, lungs and brains in full function; he was the cleverest pupil in the school, though of none of them did the master have less hope of evolving a sober and useful citizen. He was inevitably the center of all mischief as the hub is the center of the wheel; and though nobody could help liking the young rascal, he was so good-tempered, amusing, and (so to say) contagious, yet all shook their heads over him, and opined that his future looked ominous. Nancy only, who suffered most from his outrageousness, not merely loved him with all her heart, but had faith in his final triumph over all evil: she continued to believe in him, in the teeth of all evidence, when his misfortune came upon him; and, when, at last, the poor little drowned body was picked out of the river, she thanked the Lord, on her knees, through her sobs, that she had never harbored an uncharitable thought towards him.—This is how it came about.

There was one person in the parish with whom Tom was at open war—Lawyer Corvin. His aversion from him, instinctive at first, was confirmed by what he heard and credited as to his shady conduct towards his deceased uncle. Tom expected, in due season, to become the master of Billop's; and then he meant to take it out of Lawyer Corvin! Meanwhile, Corvin had a son, Peter, about Tom's size; Peter was a bully; he was once incautious enough to get into a fuss with Tom, and the latter thrashed him with such joy and thoroughness (as much on the Lawyer's account as on Peter's) that Peter ceased from that day to be a bully, and became a sneak.

One day a lot of the boys, Tom and Peter among them, went in bathing at the ford in Fen Brook. Peter took occasion to remark that Tom was a pauper anyhow, and that his (Peter's) father could sell him and his old aunt out to-morrow if he choose. The moment he selected for saying this was when he was standing dressed on the bank, and Tom was swimming naked in the middle of the stream. Tom, as he made his way with all possible speed towards shore, was heard to retort that Lawyer Corvin's money was not his own, and that one of these days he would wake up and find that he was a pauper himself. As Tom approached the landing, with obvious designs upon Peter's person, the latter took to flight; Tom pursued him as far as his own undraped plight made decorous, and then came back with an expression significant of vengeance to come. Apparently, however, he soon forgot all about the matter, and parted from his companions with his wonted good-humor.

But next morning a rumor ran that Lawyer Corvin's house had been entered and robbed during the night; the boys discussed it outside the school-house, and Peter, when he came up, confirmed it, and upon being asked whether anything were known of the thieves, put up a very pregnant look, and said he guessed something would be known before long. The master came; the boys took their seats, but 't was found that Tom was absent, not, unfortunately, a rare occurrence. But Peter looked more sagacious than ever.

School let out at noon. They swarmed forth into the elm-shadowed country road. Who were these approaching yonder? One of them, as Peter observed, was his father. A boy walked beside him: it was Tom. And who was that man with his hand resting on Tom's shoulder? Why, it was John Higgins, the constable! And there was Nancy Billop following on behind, with tears streaming down her plump cheeks. What did it all mean?

It meant, alas, that Tom had been arrested for the robbery. His jackknife had been found on the ledge of the back window, which had been forced. The threat which he had made the day before was remembered. But all this and more would have weighed nothing, had not an overwhelming piece of evidence come to light in Tom's pockets: nothing less than a wad of bank-notes which Lawyer Corvin proved he had drawn out of the bank the morning previous; as well as several coins and a gold ring, likewise his property. What could be opposed to such testimony as this?

The boy put a bold face on the matter; he admitted that he had been out a good part of the night, but he said he had been laying traps for woodchucks. He could not explain about his knife, except that he had lost it some days before. As to the terrible contents of his pockets, he vehemently professed to know nothing about it; but he was quite sure he had never been near Lawyer Corvin's. It was but a poor defence, and it was evident that his many friends were disappointed. As Tom looked round the little room in which the preliminary examination was held, there were no eyes to meet his own with encouragement and faith. Yet his self-command would not have faltered but for a sound of stifled sobbing that reached his ears. He looked round, and there was Nancy.

"My darling, good boy!" she cried out. "I know you didn't do it, if an angel was to sit right there and say you did! If they send you to prison, I'll go too, and Nellie with me! You was always the best boy in the world, and I'll lay down my life for you, I will, sooner than let them wrong you—I don't care who they are!"

So the old fire in the Billop blood flashed out again, even in gentle Nancy. Tom, remembering how far from considerate he had too often been to this beloved woman who so loved him, could not any longer keep the tears from raining down his stubborn brown phiz; and with a suddenness that disconcerted Mr. Higgins—who, however secretly wished the boy had spread a pair of wings and flown out of harm's way altogether—he jumped over the high-backed bench that stood between him and her, and threw his arms around her comfortable shoulders, and pushed his cheek against hers, and gulped out, "Don't you cry, Mammy: they can't hurt me—inside—for I didn't do it: and goin' to pris'n 's nothin', if you know you're all right. You'll see if I don't make somebody sweat for this yet! I love you, you dear, and I wish I'd always done what you wanted me!"

This, as the newspapers would say, created a visible impression favorable to the prisoner. Mr. Corvin, after a pause, observed that nobody would be more pleased than himself if Tom Linton succeeded in establishing his innocence; at the same time, until the facts before them were satisfactorily explained, justice to all parties required that the prisoner be kept in custody. He had no doubt Mr. Higgins would make him very comfortable. Still, stealing was stealing, and the law was bound to take action according to the evidence brought before it.

Then said the unlucky Tom, with a flash in his eyes, "If you was to tell how you got your money, may be you'd be going to goal for stealing 'stead of me!"

That settled the question of bail; the magistrate said he thought it would be best to let Mr. Higgins retain charge of the prisoner for the present. In fact, everybody except Tom was more or less afraid of Lawyer Corvin; and really, it was difficult to see how Tom could be otherwise than guilty.

Accordingly, the worthy constable conveyed Tom to the village lock-up, which was a room in the disused water-mill below the falls. Fenbrook was a law-abiding community, and the lock-up was empty three hundred and fifty days in the year; but this night it happened to contain another boy, a young tramp, who had been caught a while before in somebody's hen-house, and who was awaiting transference to the house of correction in the neighboring town.

It was an error of judgment on Mr. Higgin's part to put the two boys together. One boy is slippery enough; but there is no place that two boys, working together, cannot get out of. It may be that Mr. Higgins thought of this, but chose not to act upon the knowledge.

But, as people afterwards said, if he meant to give Tom a chance, he only succeeded in fixing his doom.

The next morning, when the constable opened the door to give his prisoners their breakfast, he found a hole in the roof hardly big enough for a cat to get through, but no boys.

The tramp, whom nobody was concerned about, seems to have got clear off: why could he not have been drowned instead of Tom? It is to be feared that Nancy, in the anguish of her heart, asked the Lord of Heaven and earth that question.

The body, almost unrecognizable save by the clothes, was found ten days later. The boy had tried to swim the river, probably intending to get down to the seacoast, and perhaps ship as a cabin-boy in some outward-bound vessel. It was the spring of the year, and a late flood had swollen the stream and carried away the bridge. Tom was a stout swimmer; but a floating tree may have overwhelmed him; at any rate he was gone.

The whole village turned out for the funeral. They felt, somehow, responsible for poor Tom's death. Lawyer Corvin was there too, looking properly downcast. But when, at the grave, Nancy lifted her tear-stained face and fixed her eyes, which always were so kindly, upon him, he turned pale and got behind the others, and slipped away. He could not meet that look; and yet, what had he done that anybody in his place could have helped doing?

Nancy and little Nellie lived alone in the old house, and things went ill with them. But at last, when Nellie was about eleven years old, a mysterious event happened.

Justice Newcorn Busy.

Several cases came up before Justice Newcorn this morning, but only one was tried, the rest being adjourned. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff in the case of Gillis & Company against Peebles, on contract. The cases of Midovenick against Voorhees, on contract, Sherman Outfitting Company against Thompson, in tort, and Sherman Outfitting Company against Witteman, in tort, were adjourned for one week. Summons was issued in the case of Schlick against Kurtzeh, on contract.

A Beautiful Flower.

Mrs. Charles F. Doane, of West Fifth street, returned home yesterday, after a pleasant visit at her former home in Brooklyn.

OUR RICHEST MEN.

John D. Rockefeller and Cornelius Vanderbilt Head the List.

Years ago, when the oil excitement was the talk of the country, fortunes were made and lost. The days of Coal Oil Johnny may never return again, but in all the history of the world, there never was an instance when paupers became millionaires as rapidly as then. John D. Rockefeller made his vast fortune, which is estimated at over $180,000,000, out of oil as easily as the farmer's wife gets pin money out of her chickens.

Originally four brothers came from Germany in the middle of the last century and settled in New Jersey. They formed quite a settlement in Plainfield, but toward the close of the last century they began to separate.

One branch went to New England, another came to New York while a third went to Pennsylvania. John D. Rockefeller and his brothers came from the New England branch. The New York Rockefellers are poor. There are lots of Rockefellers in New Jersey, but they have not yet acquired wealth. One great grandson of one of the four brothers is still living in Plainfield. He is almost a hundred years old. Godfried Rockefeller, who traveled by wagon with his family to Shamokin, Pa., died in 1818 in ignorance of the black oil treasure under his farm.

After knocking about, John D. Rockefeller, whose father was a physician, started a commission business. He was then 22 years old. Oil was the principal article in which he dealt. He started a refinery in Cleveland, O., and organized a company which is now the Standard Oil Company. From this beginning he has achieved great power and wealth. He is a strict Baptist, and has given two million dollars to the Chicago University. With his family he lives quietly in New York City, a most unassuming man.

Mr. Rockefeller's family is very musical, and there is a home quartet, consisting of father, mother and daughters, and four stringed instruments, and the work of Brahms, Chopin and Saint-Saens are interpreted by them in a manner that would be creditable to many symphony clubs.

Cornelius Vanderbilt is probably the thriftiest of the sons of William H., and has actually more money than he knows what to do with. His magnificent house facing Central Park is eagerly sought by almost every visitor to this city.

His daughter, Gertrude is, after Miss Rockefeller, the greatest heiress in the country. In spite of the newspaper stories about her wonderful beauty, she is really a plain looking girl, but she has been educated abroad and has an undefinable charm. This perhaps comes from her common sense as much as anything else.

The Vanderbilt money as inherited, and the system bearing the name, is supposed to be worth nearly three hundred millions, of which this favored son owns a third. While he is somewhat of a society man, he does not care for that kind of life, except for the pleasure it gives his family. He finds most pleasure in the quiet of his library. He wants to be left severely alone. He enjoys particularly a month's walk in the Swiss Tyrol or a vacation in the wilderness of the Norwegian forests.

While he is a subscriber to all the social gayeties at Newport, Trouville and other resorts, he does it more for the social position of his children than for himself.

The wealth of Cornelius Vanderbilt is estimated by those who know him intimately as eighty millions. While he apparently realizes the responsibility of the control of this vast sum of money, he knows, too, that its possession carries with it the possibility of great good, and his quiet charities and real kindness of heart are known to thousands of people.

The Breakers, the gorgeous cottage he occupies at Newport, is as handsome a country place as can be found anywhere. It is a veritable palace. Mr. Vanderbilt and his family generally spent a few months of the year abroad.

Explorer Stanley.

What a picturesquely tortuous career has been that of Henry M. Stanley, who has just succeeded in breaking into Parliament as the member from Lambeth.

As a boy an inmate of a charity institution, and then a cabin boy; a sailor; a soldier; a Confederate and then a Unionist in the war of the Rebellion; a newspaper reporter of a very ordinary type; a foreign correspondent who has made his mark in spite of ridicule, contempt and arraignment as a falsifier; a great African explorer; the finder of Livingstone; an explorer again with an army at command in the service of the king of the Belgians; an author of successful books of autobiography, travel and adventure; a lyceum lecturer at a thousand dollars a night; a British citizen becoming a benedict when past middle life; as a candidate for membership in the House of Commons hooted and rotten egged and his wife insulted on the hustings; and now winning the ambition of his later life in obtaining a seat in Parliament, hanging fast to the skirt of Lord Salisbury's robes.

The story of his life is a romance, indeed. His fame is world wide, and can never be taken away from him; but there are those who to their dying day will declare that he was a faking newspaper man, a slave driver worse than the slave owners, whom he fought and subdued, a tyrant whose path to success lay over the dead bodies of thousands of poor Africans ruthlessly slain, a man without a conscience and with a marble heart. Other contend that he is a prince of the pen, a missionary, an instrument of Providence, a Christian benefactor and a Christian martyr.

The Conplaint of Thousands Upon Thousands.

Health and Strength Are Within Your Grasp.

Dr. Greene's Nervura Makes You Strong and Well.

It is the Great Restorative of Nerve and Body.

The world is filled with people who, while not exactly sick, yet lack strength. They are weak, tired, languid and nervous, especially at this season of the year, and have lost their old-time vigor and energy, and go about their work in a listless manner, without ambition, and feeling dull and dispirited.

In this connection we publish the cure of Mrs. B. B. Graves, of Middlefield, Mass., in the lady's own words:

"I have been sick for two years, and have been a great sufferer during all that time. I was fearfully nervous, and could get but little sleep. I was constantly worrying about something. My head ached nearly all the time so that I could hardly endure it. My stomach was in a terrible condition, and I could eat but very little. I suffered awfully from the little food I did eat.

"I was frightfully weak and exhausted all the time, and could do almost no work at all. I was troubled with rheumatism. I was in a fearful condition from all these complaints, and thought I never should get well. I took medicines and employed doctors but got no better.

"Finally I began the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and immediately there was an improvement. I gained rapidly in health and strength, and everyone of my troubles soon left me. I was entirely cured of them all by that wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. There is no other medicine in the world that will do what that will. I advise everybody to use it."

Use it—it will make you strong and well—give you back your snap, energy and ambition to work.

It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

PRIMARIES HELD IN THE FOUR CITY WARDS LAST NIGHT.

One Delegate Elected From Each Ward, With the Exception of the Fourth, Which Sends Two—No Instructions.

The First ward Democratic primary was held on North avenue, and was called to order promptly at eight o'clock by Michael DeCourcy, who was also made chairman of the meeting, and John McIntyre was chosen as secretary.

By a unanimous vote of all present John Rafferty was selected as the delegate to represent the first ward at the Democratic State convention to be held at Trenton next Thursday.

The Democrats of the Second ward gathered in the Bryant public school building last evening to select their one delegate to the State convention at Trenton. James E. Martine, as a member of the county committee, called the meeting to order. A. H. Atterbury was then elected chairman and took the chair. Charles Stover and Louis G. Timpson were nominated for secretary, but Mr. Stover withdrew and Mr. Timpson was declared elected. E. W. Conklin was next selected as judge of election and with the other officers, was sworn in. Louis G. Timpson was nominated for delegate, and on motion, the secretary cast a ballot for him. James E. Martine was chosen to act as alternate. The secretary was then instructed to prepare the credentials for himself as delegate and for Mr. Martine as alternate.

Mr. Martine suggested that a collection be taken up for the benefit of Janitor Stephen Hope, who had so kindly lighted up and opened the building for their benefit. The suggestion was taken and W. A. McClure passed the hat. The meeting then adjourned at the motion of Mr. J. W. Yates.

There was a good attendance at the Third ward Democratic primary which was held at the Revere House last evening. The meeting was called to order by the chairman, Edward C. Searing. Joseph Sheppard was made secretary, and Frank McInerney and Wilbert Pennington inspectors. Frank P. Sheppard was elected as the delegate to the State convention.

The fourth ward primary was called to order in Blimm's hotel parlors by M. Flynn who was made the permanent chairman. T. H. McCarthy was made the secretary, P. Revelle, judge, and P. Flynn, Jr., inspector. On motion the secretary was instructed to cast one ballot for John J. Goff and James C. Manning as delegates to the State convention. The delegates were authorized to appoint their alternate if they found it impossible to attend the convention.

BOROUGH APPEALS TO CITY.

Common Council Will be Asked to Have the Brook Cleaned.

At a special meeting of the borough board of health a few days ago a letter was written to the city common council in which it is sought to have the latter take some action with reference to the condition of the brook, which the people residing near have come to think is a menace to their continued good health. Last year the borough board of health went to the expense of having the stream thoroughly cleaned and now they think that it is the city's duty to do the same, inasmuch as the pollution comes entirely from the sewage which flows from the city side. The borough board endeavored to get the city board of health to take some action with reference to the matter two month ago, but failed in this direction.

Councilman Frost made an examination of the brook this morning and said that there was but little doubt that it needed cleaning badly, and that the council would probably take the necessary steps at its next meeting, which will be held on Monday night of next week.

The method of cleaning last year was to tear up all the weeds which filled the channel, and then flush it with fire hose until thoroughly cleaned.

The Prettiest Hat.

It has been said that the prettiest girl of the family sits at the window the most, and the prettiest hats and bonnets in the town are to be seen in the windows of White's store. Today, the first day of the fall opening, was a grand success. Their milliner parlors were thronged all day with women who were perfectly delighted with the styles and trimmings of the hats and bonnets that Miss Daly took so much pleasure in showing them.

The Post Was Too Hard.

When playing about the park in the rear of the freight house this noon, a little colored boy was knocked insensible by a blow from a loose post which swung around on the pipe rail and struck him on the head. A HANDICAP FIELD DAY SOON.

HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETES ARRANGE FOR SPORTING EVENTS.

The Events Will Be Held on October 12th, Open to High School Pupils Only—Athletic Association Elect Officers.

After waiting a week to allow the school to get running in regular order, the Plainfield High School Athletic Association met yesterday afternoon for the first meeting in this term. The meeting was called to order by second Vice President Charles Noble, and in the absence of the regular secretary, Wilbur F. Cornwell was appointed to act in that capacity. The following officers were then elected: President, Volney F. Green; First Vice President, Wilbur F. Cornwell; Second Vice President, Chas. Noble; Third Vice President, Raymond Carroll; Fourth Vice President, George P. Smith; Secretary, Herbert Richardson; Treasurer, Walter Serrell.

The officers in the Bicycling Division were then elected as follows: Captain, Wilbur F. Cornwell; First Lieutenant, Volney F. Green; Second Lieutenant, George Coard; Color Bearer, Lindsey Hillman; Bugler, Raymond A. McGee.

Mr. Cornwell then made a motion that a handicap field day be held on Saturday, October 12th, open to High School pupils only. The motion was then carried unanimously. It was next decided that a committee of five be appointed by the chairman to make arrangements for the field day, and to draw up a list of events to report to the society at a meeting next Tuesday. The committee appointed was as follows: Wilbur F. Cornwell, chairman; Henry Eggerding, Charles Noble, Charles Dolliver and Herbert Richardson.

A general discussion then followed on the field day, and it was thought best to charge ten cents admission to the Crescent Oval, if it could be secured at suitable terms. There will be no special prizes for each event, but a prize will probably be given for the all-round championship, while one of the members of the association will offer, it is expected, a banner to the class scoring the greatest number of points.

The meeting then adjourned until next Tuesday afternoon, when the committee of arrangements for the field day will make a report.

LEFT THE RIG IN THE STREET.

Hired the Outfit From Blair's Livery Stable, and Had a Narrow Escape From a Smashup by a Train of Cars.

Two men, with a single horse and buggy, drove into Bound Brook yesterday morning, and tying the horse in front of a grocery store climbed out and disappeared. The men looked respectable, while the rig itself was a handsome one. The men did not return and in the afternoon the horse was led into Taylor's livery stable and the police began a search for the owner of the abandoned horse and buggy. Chief Grant, of this city, was notified, and after inquiring around among the different livery stables, learned that Adam C. Blair had rented a rig of that description to two men from Newark. Mr. Blair went down to Bound Brook last evening, recognized his horse and buggy, and brought them home.

While at Bound Brook Mr. Blair learned that he came very near being minus a horse and buggy. Just as the two men started to drive over the tracks a train went by, and those who saw the affair said that had the horse been an inch further on the track there would have been a smashup, and as it was the train whizzed by so close that it touched the horse's nose.

Both of the men who so strangely left the buggy are known in this city and have a very good reputation here. Their home is in Newark, and it is supposed that that they took the train for that place from Bound Brook.

FLEISHHAUER FAILURE.

The Proprietor Said to Have Gone to California.

Upon inquiry a Daily Press reporter learned yesterday that the reason why H. J. Fleischhauer's drug store was closed, was that the proprietor was financially embarrassed.

Mr. Fleischhauer came to Plainfield some time ago and associated himself with another gentleman in the drug business. Soon after he leased a store in the Voehl building and started a business for himself.

Although it was not supposed that he was doing a very large business, it was not thought that he was running behind. But such seems to be the case. He was heavily in debt and his creditors were anxious to have their money. It is said that he had a lucrative position offered him in California, and that he started for that place on Monday, leaving his wife to settle his financial troubles.

Mrs. Fleischhauer has employed ex-Judge Codington to look after her interests, and it is thought that matters will be settled satisfactorily. It is understood that his creditors are principally New York men.

Mr. Fleischhauer was an exceedingly sociable man and won many friends.

Mrs. Fleischhauer expects to join him as soon as the difficulties are settled.

Frightened At a Match.

A runaway took place at Scotch Plains Sunday evening, but luckily no one was injured. Louis Frentz had been out riding with his wife and had just taken her home. He struck a match to light a cigar when the horse jumped forward and sent Mr. Frentz flying out of the carriage. The horse then ran up to the mountain where he was captured by a friend.

Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says: "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as staple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

WILL TRY IT ON APPEAL.

What Craig A. Marsh Has to Say About the Haberle Case.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—Referring to your yesterday's report of the justice court case, Haberle against the executors of the Babcock estate, will you kindly permit a few observations in the interests of truth. There is no possible objection to the published statement that "Judge W. A. Coddington * * * argued the case in a splendid manner," etc. Such a manner is always characteristic of the Judge and his arguments. But if you were led to believe that the jury heard witnesses on both sides, or that the executors themselves testified, or that these justice court proceedings settled anything finally, as for example that the Babcock executors "must pay the carpenters," etc., you were misled. The fact is that there were witnesses called on one side only.

When Judge Coddington finished with his witnesses, I advised the Babcock executors that Mr. Haberle had not made out a case, and that we were not required to swear our witnesses until he did; that the jury would probably give plaintiff a verdict (as they afterwards did), but that the whole case would be tried all over again anyway at Elizabeth, and it would be better to reserve our fire. The executors seemed willing to take my advice on a question of law, even though Judge Coddington and Justice did not agree with me. Having decided to take the case to a higher court, we did not call a single witness. The arguments before the jury were merely on the case as presented by the evidence of Mr. Haberle and his own witnesses. The appeal papers have been ordered, and there will be a complete new trial before Judge McCormick and a new jury.

If plaintiff and his witnesses do not make out a case in the higher court, that court will direct a verdict against him without requiring any evidence from the defendants. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff's evidence does make out a case, the witnesses for the executors will then be heard for the first time.

Craig A. Marsh.

IN SOMERSET COUNTY COURT

A NUMBER OF BOROUGH CASES ARE ON THE CALENDAR.

Several Men Who Will Face Serious Accusations Before the Grand Jury—Mr. Thorn's License to be Opposed.

The Somerset County Circuit Court opened at Somerville yesterday, but no important business was transacted. There are several cases, both criminal and civil on the court calendar that are of interest to the people of this city and the borough. The first is that of Angelo Osniarti, an Italian, who is charged with highway robbery. Sometime ago a girl by the name of Wyckoff was knocked down in Washington Valley by an Italian, and her pocketbook taken from her. Osniarti was suspected, and was captured by Chief Marshal VanHorn at Smalley Brothers, stone crusher, where he was in hiding. George W. DeMeza represents the Italian highwayman.

George Lewis, colored, is the next prisoner of interest on the criminal docket. The charge against him is grand larceny. Sometime ago some one went into several vacant houses on Fairview avenue that Woolston & Buckle were painting, and stole a quantity of brushes and paint. Inquiry was made and Mrs. Messrsmith, who resides near by, said that she saw a colored man answering to Lewis' description go out of the houses with the paint. Mr. Buckle had a search warrant issued and went with Chief Marshal VanHorn to search the premises of Lewis. Here they found a wagon freshly painted and on further search found a quantity of paint in cans on the roof. The different kinds had been mixed together, but Mr. Buckle was sure after investigation that they were the property of himself and partner. Lawyer George W. DeMeza, of this city, looks after the interests of Lewis in this case. Lewis has already served a term of ten years in prison.

Joseph Green and John Cahill appear for the same offence. Green was employed in Horace J. Martin's blacksmith shop and Cahill was another borough hite. One night the two men started for Washingtonville after drinking heavily. They were in for a good time and broke into houses, fired off their revolvers, and frightened the people in that vicinity half out of their wits. Those who objected to their treatment were promptly pounded into subjecion. At last Constable Stewart, of North Plainfield township, appeared on the scene, and the two men fled. Stewart captured Green at once, but Cahill escaped only to be captured later.

There are two civil cases of local interest. The first is Smalley vs. Bird, on contract, appealed from Justice Todd, of Bedminster. The other is Doud vs. Carpenter, on contract, appealed from Justice Sperry, of the borough. George W. DeMeza represents the plaintiff in both cases.

There is one matter which comes before the Court which is of great interest to the citizens of the borough and indicectly to those of Plainfield also. That is the granting of the license of Edward P. Thorn, who has applied for one to run a hotel on Somerset street in the Bock building. A number of the prominent citizens of the borough are opposed to a new license anywhere in the borough, and especially in that location. George W. De Meza has been retained by those who are fighting the license, and will make a strong fight against it when the question comes up a week from Friday.

The temperance meetings that are held every Sunday afternoon at Garwood are largely attended by Plainfielders. George Watts, of this city, has charge of the music. Next Sunday afternoon there will be a special open-air meeting, and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

TAMMANY FOUGHT HARD

Grace Men Receive One-Fifth Representation.

Tigers Will Carry the Fight into the Convention and a Lively Time Is Promised — Excise and Sunday Closing Plank—The Slate as It Looked This Morning.

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 25.—Every indication this morning pointed to a bitter struggle in the Democratic State Convention to-day. The committee on credentials settled the New York contest by the adoption of the following resolution offered by Mr. Yorke, of Kings, by a vote of ayes, 32; noes, 17: "Resolved, That the sitting members from the county of New York, being the delegation representing the Tammany Hall organization, are regular and are entitled to seats in this convention; and said organization is entitled to recognition in all future conventions as regular, and its delegates are to be placed upon the preliminary and other rolls thereof; and, in the appointment of inspectors of election, the use of the party emblem, and in every way in which the question of party organization may arise, said Tammany Hall organization shall be recognized and seated as the regular organization of the party in New York county; but in the interest of harmony at this time the commiteee recommend, subject to the aforesaid conditions, that the sitting delegates, as well as the delegates known as the state democracy, be admitted to the convention, with one-fifth of a vote to each state democracy delegate and four-fifths of a vote to each Tammany Hall delegate." Tammany, it was understood, will not give up the fight and intends to carry the struggle into the convention.

The Slate This Morning.

The slate as it stood this morning was: For secretary of state, Gen. Horatio C. King of Kings; for attorney-general, Daniel Griffin, of Jefferson; for state treasurer, John H. Judson, of Fulton; for comptroller, Augustus F. Scheu of Erie; for state engineer and surveyor, George Clinton Wade, of Oneida; for judge of the court of appeals, Alton B. Parker, of Ulster. There was some talk of the withdrawal of Gen. King and the substitution of a man like Gen. Martin T. McMahon, a man with a war record to offset that of the republican candidate, Gen. Palmer. Charles Cary of Cattaraugus, is still talked of, but his boom is waning. For attorney-general and for state treasurer, Griffin and Judson seem to have a majority of the delegates. For state engineer, Russell B. Stuart, of Syracuse, has a good-sized boom, but Wade has the inside track. For comptroller there is a full field, and it looks like anybody's race. The list of candidates was increased this morning by the addition of the name of T. C. T. Crain, ex-city chamberlain of New York. He will be put in the race by Tammany hall.

Almost Perfect Harmony.

Barring Tammany's fight against the admission of Grace-Fairchild men the first day's session of the democratic convention was harmonious. The attendance was large, the enthusiasm great, and the long string of candidates made matters lively before and after the opening session. Perry Belmont, who is said to be in training for the next gubernatorial nomination, was temporary chairman and in his speech he sounded the slogan of battle and outlined the policy of the party on the issues which will be uppermost in the fall campaign in the Empire state. The big men of the party from all over the state are here, but the delegates are running the convention. Tammany is fighting tooth and nail against the recognition of the state democracy, but they seem to have undertaken too big a contract.

Excise and Sunday Closing.

The plank in the platform which will be most talked about in the coming campaign, is that relating to excise and Sunday observance, was framed last night. Weeks have been spent in its preparation, and the brainy men of the party have struggled with hundreds of suggestions. The plank is intended to be acceptable to the German-Americans and other liberal minded people without offending the more straight-laced democrats. It is most cleverly worded. The plank has been submitted to the German-Americans and it is satisfactory to them. It is also satisfactory to the Tammany democrats who announced some time ago that they were out for legislation to do away with Rooseveltism. Just how the democrats of rural districts will take it is a question which the November election will solve. It is certainly a plain declaration of a subject which is usually dodged in party platform and is in strong contrast to the plank adopted at Saratoga by the republicans last week. The plank is a slight modification of the following which was submitted by the committee of the German-American organization of the city of New York:

The Annoying Plank.

"The democratic party, being as it ever has been, strictly in favor of respectful observance of Sunday, especially by abstaining from all save necessary labor and avocation, and yet mindful of the right of every citizen to the enjoyment of worship and comforts and recreations according to his own conscience and wishes, as far as compatible with due regard to the beliefs and desires of others, we promise to, propose to, and endeavor to obtain from this coming legislature a law which will enable each community to determine for itself by popular vote whether the sale of food, beverages and other necessaries shall be permitted on the first day of the week, during certain hours, and in a manner so restricted as not to interfere with religious observance to be specified by statute."

A Bitter Fight.

Senator David B. Hill did not attend the convention yesterday, but remained in his room at the hotel. He was present at the hearing of the contests before the committee on credentials last evening and listened closely to the arguments of the Grace-Fairchild people and also to the replies of the Tammany orators. Senator Hill threw all his influence in favor of admitting the contestants, and so bitter was the fight that ex-Lieut.-Gov. Sheehan, who represents Senator Murphy, who is laid up at the hotel here with rheumatism, and also Richard Croker, who is in New York, that Sheehan and Hill scarcely spoke to each other.

CHINESE LEPER IN NEW YORK.

Health Doctor Belittles the Matter, Saying There Are Other Cases.

New York, Sept. 25.—A case of a Chinese laundryman affected with leprosy was discovered last evening by the officials in charge of the Good Samaritan dispensary at Broome and Essex streets. His name is Long Dong. He is 30 years old and ran a laundry on Lexington avenue. He has been a resident of the city for five years and says he has been sick for two years. Dr. Bogart of the board of health made a thorough examination of the Chinaman. The patient was badly marked with white spots the size of a half dollar all over his body and had no feeling in the affected portions. Dr. Bogart seemed to belittle the matter and said that while it was a clear case of leprosy it had 500 duplicates in New York city. The patient, however, was sent to the reception hospital where he will be closely guarded.

SIGNS OF GOOD TIMES.

C. P. Huntington's View of the Business Situation.

Omaha, Sept. 25.—President Colis P. Huntington of the Southern Pacific Railroad company was here yesterday on his way to the coast. He said in an interview that the general condition of the railways and of the country is better than it has been for many years. "There is a better feeling in business and between labor and capital," he said. On the Pacific railway question he said that there was no doubt that congress would settle the question fairly; that the government had already reaped ten times the cost of the roads in the increased value of the land of the west, and the only thing which stood in the way of amicable adjustment was the demagogues.

Toward the liquidation of this sum his friends had subscribed £1,500, and the remainder would be made up, so that twenty shillings in the pound would be paid.

China Upholds the Viceroy of Szechuen.

London, Sept. 25.—The Morning Post prints a dispatch to a news agency from Shanghai saying it is reported that China has refused to grant the demand of Great Britain for the banishment of the late viceroy of the province of Szechuen, who is accused of having instigated the outrages on the missions. The dispatch also says that an imperial decree has been issued appointing Li Hung Chang and all the members of the tsung-li-yamen a commission to formulate an additional treaty between China and Japan. A dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette from Shanghai says that the entire province of Che-Kiang has again been placarded with anti-foreign and anti-Christian proclamations causing much anxiety among foreign residents.

SPRUCE IV. WAS LEADING.

No Race Declared on Account of Lack of Wind.

Center Island, Sept. 25.—For the second time "no race" was declared in the Sewanahaka club's series of the international challenge race for small boats. Yesterday in varible winds, and sometimes lack of any, Ethelwyn and Spruce IV. struggled during the full racing time of five hours to go twice around the triangle of two miles a side, but only managed to finish a little more than five-sixths of the twelve-mile course. The result yesterday was distinctly favorable to the seamanship of the challenger, and while the American boat was generally well handled, an error of judgment bade fair to have given the victory to the English half-rater, had there been wind enough to finish.

CHICAGO PAPER DUPED.

Chicago, Sept. 25.—There is no truth in the report printed in an evening paper and sent out from this city last evening to the effect that a wreck had occured on the Rock Island road at 47th street, in which several persons were killed. The report seems to have been the work of two reporters on a rival paper.

THE TURN OF LIFE.

WOMAN'S CRITICAL PERIOD

Contemplated with Less Fear than of Old.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

There is no period in woman's earthly career which she approaches with so much anxiety as the "change of life." Yet during the past twenty years women have learned much from a woman.

It is safe to say that women who prepare themselves for the eventful period pass through it much easier than in the past.

There is but one course to pursue. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be used in time to subdue the nervous complications, and prepare the system for the change.

It is well for those approaching the time to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and get her free advice.

Such testimony as the following should be convincing:—

"Your Vegetable Compound has been a God-send to me: it saved my life when all else failed. I would have been in my grave ten years ago but for it. My womb had fallen and rested on the bladder. The doctor could not relieve me: my mind was deranged. Your Compound cured me. It helped me through the change of life all right: am now in good health. It has also cured my husband of kidney trouble: made him like a new man. Please state my words in the strongest terms. I am glad to send you my picture. I travelled twelve miles to have it taken for you. MRS. W. L. DAY, Bettsville, O.

HER LONG TRIP ENDED

Miss Londonderry Is a Bicycle Globe Trotter.

Started in June, 1894, and Finished Her Journey in Fifteen Months, Fourteen Days Ahead of Time—Won a Purse of $10,000 and Earned $5,000 Lecturing.

Boston, Sept. 25.—Miss Annie Londonderry arrived in this city yesterday after a trip around the world on a bicycle. Miss Londonderry is nursing a broken arm, the result of a bad fall sustained in one of the western towns. On June 26, 1894, she started on her trip around the world. She was given a good send-off by several hundred friends, who were at the state house where the start was made. Her trip, she says, was made upon a wager. She was to receive $10,000 if she finished the journey in fifteen months, and she feels proud of the record she has made. On Thursday, Sept. 12, the journey came to an end in Chicago, fourteen days ahead of the time allowed. In addition to the purse of $10,000 which she says was handed over to her by the parties making the wager. Miss Londonderry also accumulated $5,000 from lectures given in the several countries, and also by participating in exhibitions of bicycle riding. Her experience in riding a bicycle was very limited, having taken her first lesson on the day she was to begin her long journey. She soon mastered the wheel, however, and after a few days' riding had very little trouble in getting over the roads. During all of her long trip Miss Londonderry says she met with a royal greeting, particularly in Paris, where she was given a grand reception, and also made considerable money by lecturing. After remaining in this vicinity for a day or two Miss Londonderry will proceed to New York, where she will reside.

Hundreds were out last night fighting flames in the hope of checking the fire. The city is filled with clouds of smoke and flying cinders. There are many houses in the track of the fire and they will probably be destroyed before long.

"CON" DAILEY BADLY HURT.

Brooklyn's Catcher Meets with a Serious Accident While Bathing.

New York, Sept. 25.—"Con" Dailey, catcher of the Brooklyn team, is suffering at his home in Sheepshead Bay from injuries that will certainly prevent his appearance on the field again this season and may permanently end his baseball career. On Sunday afternoon last, while bathing off Callery's dock at Sheepshead Bay, he dived into shallow water. He landed all in a heap, but managed to stagger to his feet, his head all on one side. Dr. McLain was hastily summoned, and, after an examination, decided that serious injuries had been sustained by the cervical vertebrae and prescribed perfect rest. He will not allow any one to see his patient. The injuries have produced paralysis of both arms, the trouble being in the brain and spine. "Con" has not been unconscious at any time, although his faculties have been decidedly dulled. Dr. McLain does not think that the paralysis will be permanent.

REBELS BURN A TOWN

Yumuri, Cuba, Wiped Out of Existence.

Not a House Escaped the Ravages of the Flames—Residents Were Sympathizers of the Spaniards—Several of the Refugees Reach This Country—Spain Buys Gunboats.

Philadelphia, Sept. 25.—After an unsuccessful search for Yumuri, a Cuban seaport, the British steamship Culmore, a fruit carrier which was sent there to load bananas for Philadelphia, returned to this port last night and reported that the entire town had been devastated by the insurgents' torch on September 18 and destroyed, not a home having escaped the ravages of the flames. Several of the refugees were picked up along the coast of the former town and brought to Philadelphia on board the Culmore. Prominent citizens of Yumuri were sympathizers with Spain in her warfare upon the Cubans, and the insurgents determined that in order to render such sympathy ineffectual they would destroy the town. Hundred of persons, many of them the poorer classes, were left homeless.

American Gunboats for Cuba.

New York, Sept. 25.—Within a month nine American-built steam cutters under the Spanish flag will be on cruising duty on the north coast of Cuba. The late Admiral Manuel Delgado Pareje sent Lieutenant Commander Triana to this city on special duty, and the orders for these cutters were placed very quietly. Not until they were completed did the fact of their ownership become known. The last of the nine was sent to Cuba a few days ago. The lengths of the cutters vary from sixty to seventy feet, and their speed from eleven to fourteen miles an hour. Their average draught is four feet. Their crews—numbering from fifteen to twenty, all members of the Spanish navy—will be officered by men of known ability. The vessels are built especially for rapid inshore work. Their armament will be of a very destructive type, including American Gatling guns and Nordenfeldts. Smugglers of contraband-of-war will be their prey. The Berenger pontoon service and the American cutters, in all thirty-nine cutters and floats, will add immensely to the effectiveness of the Spanish naval forces in Cuba. With these and the double lines of war vessels cruising, it is declared that all outside relief will be cut off from the rebels, now in the central part of eastern Cuba.

For Aiding Cuban Rebels.

Havana, Sept. 25.—Eudaldo Tamayo, Antonio Bravo, Alsredo Betancourt and Desiderio Fajardo have been arrested at Santiago de Cuba for aiding the rebellion. They will be deported to Spain.

A MOTHER'S DISTRESS.

She Fears Her Husband May Have Killed Her Children.

Hartford, Conn., Sept. 25.—Samuel P. Cheetham, 62 years old, a long time employe of Colt's factory, drew $1,600 from the Society of Savings three weeks ago and left town with his two boys, Samuel, 10, and John, 8. He told his wife that he was going to Savin Rock for an outing, but has not since been heard from. She fears that some harm has befallen the children, and states that there is insanity in the family. Her husband's brother died in a madhouse at Dublin, Ireland.

NATIVES IN REVOLT.

A Rebellion in the Portuguese Portion of the Island of Timor.

Amsterdam, Sept. 25.—A dispatch received here from Batavia, Java, reports that a rebellion has broken out among the natives in the Portuguese portion of the island of Timor. Troops that were sent to quell the insurrection were repulsed, and the secretary and three agents of the government were killed. The governor has started for the interior with reinforcements.

Male Inquest.

It seems to be part of the business of the theatrical profession for the star to miss her jewels about every so often. New York now has a rage of performing elephants, and what an interesting and novel innovation it would be if one of the animals would only lose its trunk.

Senator Hill—the man who has had more political coffins constructed for his burial than any other man living—is still the ruling spirit in the Democratic State convention now in session in New York State. His policy of demanding that a section of the delegates of the Grace men in New York and the Shepherd men in Brooklyn be admitted to the convention seems to be the only method by which the New York State Democrats will be able to get together and win.

Legal action to compel steps to prevent the electrolysis of water mains in Omaha has been instituted by the representatives of the American Water Works company. The action has been brought in the Federal court against the Omaha Street Railway company in the form of a request for an order to compel the adopting and carrying out of some method of preventing the action of electric current upon the water mains, with the alternative of an injunction against the operation of the street railways.—Exchange.

In the report of the Suffrage Committee of the South Carolina Constitutional convention, which has been submitted to and will be adopted by that body, the educational qualification known as the "Mississippi plan," has been recommended, in combination with the present registration and ballot-box law of the State. Under the latter ingenious device the voter has to deposit his ballot himself in the proper box, and if found elsewhere it is invalid. Such a regulation, of course, is opposed to every tradition of freedom and patriotism. It is modern Jacobinism, wearing the cloak of "white supremacy.—Newark News.

Only Talked To.

Marshal Wilson had a needless chase last night for a colored man named Hatchett. The latter was a trifle to noisy in the borough near the merry-go-around, and Marshal Lines called to him to be quiet. This gave him the idea that the Marshal wanted him, and Marshal Wilson hearing the noise also thought the man was wanted. Hatchett started to run and Marshal Wilson gave chase. After a considerable amount of ground had been covered he was captured and returned to Marshal Lines. The latter gave him a good talking to and released him.

Betting on the Result Already.

Charles Hand, the builder, of this city, has already wagered eighty-five dollars that John W. Griggs will not be elected Governor of this State. Inasmuch as the Democratic nominee has not yet been named, and as Mr. Hand is a staunch follower of the G. O. P., it goes to show that there is an undertow reacting that the managers of the Republican party did not count on when they nominated the man from Passaic for their standard-bearer.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

ELECTRIC THIEF DETECTOR.

Novel Means Employed by Chicagoians to Catch the Criminals Among Them.

Chicago appears to have a lively appreciation of electricity as a thief catcher. It is not long ago that a barber on State street, who had a cigar stand on one end of his shop, found that his cigars were being unaccountably devastated.

The robbery was invariably committed in the night. He sat up and watched for several nights, but the cigars were untouched so long as his eye was upon them; it was only when he slept that they again began to disappear. As a last resort he brought in a camera just before dark, focussed it on the cigar stand, and so connected it electrically that when the latch of the showcase was pulled a magnesium light would be flashed and a picture taken.

The next day the cigars were unmolested, but in the camera there was a clearly defined picture of two boys who lived in the neighborhood, one in the act of opening the case and the other preparing to receive the booty. The flash had scared them and they made off; but they were speedily arrested and forthwith sent to prison on the evidence of the camera.

Another clever bit of electrical detective work has been done in a large manufactory on the West Side of Chicago. For several months many of the girls employed in one of the departments have been complaining of thefts committed in their dressing room. Silk handkerchiefs, veils, and money disappeared with increasing frequency until at length the management took the matter in hand.

A double wire was sewed in the lining of the cloak of a trustworthy girl, who was taken into confidence, and a spring jaw in the pocket was connected with the two hooks on which the cloak hung. The conducting wires were then run through a partition, along a molding and through the floor to a battery fitted with an alarm bell, and hidden in a room in which the girls were at work fifty feet away.

A purse was placed at the bottom of the cloak pocket, which could not be opened without closing the circuit. In about three hours the bell rang a merry peal, and hurrying to the room where the trap was set the owner of the cloak found one of the factory girls in the act of rifling her purse.

As the delinquent confessed that she alone had done all the stealing she was simply discharged. The electrician who designed the apparatus makes a specialty of that kind of business. He says he can circumvent the knavish tricks of the smartest thief, and that between the electric light and the infinite variety of electrical detective and alarm appliances now devised the cracksman's occupation is virtually gone.

Murderers May Not Be Executed.

The preliminary arrangements towards carrying the case of the two Italian murderers, Joseph A. Ragic and Anello Spina, to the Supreme Court, have been made by George S. Silzer, their counsel of New Brunswick. He has prepared the testimony taken in the two trials and will present it to Chancellor McGill at an early date for his consideration. In case the Chancellor grants the writ of error it will act as a stay and the execution of the two men will be delayed until the Supreme Court gives its decision.

The Potato Cure for Tippling.

A man prominent in the affairs of Dunkirk yesterday related the following incident:

"One day, two months after I had signed the pledge, I had a craving for a drink of whisky so strong that I could see nothing else but drinks about me and felt as if I must have at least one drink. I told a friend of my state of mind. He said, 'You need not drink. I can tell you of a substitute that will stop your discomfort. Get a bowl of ice water and a raw potato, peel it and cut down one end of it to a size convenient to take in the mouth. Dip the potato in the ice water and suck it every time you think you must have the whisky.' I did as he advised. I took the bowl of ice water and the potato and placed them on a table at the head of my bed and would dip the potato in the water and place it between my lips every few moments till I went to sleep. I awoke free from any desire to drink whisky and have been free from it ever since. That one treatment eradicated my craving for whisky for all the time that has since elapsed."—Buffalo Courier.

Prepared Breakfast While Asleep.

Somnambulism has in all ages furnished many curious illustrations, and among them may be noted one that occurred in a West Utica residence a few days ago. The husband and wife were aroused by the breakfast bell ringing in the middle of the night. They arose and discovered that it was 2 o'clock, but on hastily dressing and going down to the dining room they found breakfast ready and waiting for them. They were greatly alarmed at the condition of things, for they at first imagined that the hired girl had suddenly gone insane.

After a few minutes, however, they discovered that she was asleep. She had got up, started the fire, prepared the morning meal and had it ready for serving, but was sound asleep all the time. The only unusual thing was her failure to put on her shoes. They were in a quandary as to what course to pursue, for the girl could not be awakened, and seemed to take it as an affront that they should insist that she was asleep. The gentleman was about to summon a physician, when the wife dashed a glass of cold water in the girl's face and she awoke. She was badly frightened over the occurrence, but as this was the first time in her life she had ever exhibited somnambulistic tendencies, and as she has done no housework in her sleep since, the household has ceased to be disturbed.—Utica Observer.

WOMEN AS ACROBATS.

A Performer Gives an Insight of the Literary Tastes of Circus Ladies.

Once a year Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth calls attention to the evolution that goes on in the circus world, as well as in everything else. There is as much difference between the sawdust attractions of to-day and those of thirty years ago as between the science of the present time and that which was possessed in the days of our late war.

In no one respect has there been a greater change than in the ever increasing number of women among performers. At one time they only appeared in three or four specialties, while men usurped all the rest. In speaking of this change Miss Josie Ashton, who is one of the particular stars of the show this season, said: "It is hard to say what women cannot do if they make up their minds to do it. To-day you find them as clowns and ringmistresses, as contortionists and acrobats; you find them in every kind of riding, swimming, fencing, boxing and in moving heavy weights. About the only specialty that they are not in at the present moment is leaping and vaulting. There is no reason why they should not; nearly every good woman performer can jump as well as a man, only it is not the fashion at present.

"The reasons for this are quite numerous. The performer is paid very handsomely and is well taken care of. Her life is a very healthy and pleasant one, and enables her to see a great deal of the world. She enjoys a certain independence, and, as long as she behaves herself, the respect and esteem of everybody she meets. Above all, her training develops her muscles, her self-reliance and her courage. She is better able to take care of herself than are ordinary women, and can do better things for herself where the latter would depend upon their husbands or would call in a porter. Performers lead very quiet lives, because, if they did otherwise, they would soon deteriorate in their work. It may seem strange, but nearly all women performers read a great deal, and carry books with them when they travel. One of the women in our company carries Lucille, another one makes it a rule to read Longfellow every day; there is another one who is always looking over Shakespeare, but that, I fancy, is because she thinks she will be a great tragedienne some day."

TWO-HANDED WHIST.

A New Game Which is a Great Improvement Over "Double Dummy."

Old whist players will probably greet with suspicion the announcement that it is possible to play an interesting game of whist with less than four hands. "Double dummy" and "single dummy" were never popular with the votaries of this game. They were classed with old maid and casino and other games which allowed more or less gossip while the game was in progress, and did not allow the display of any great amount of thought. A new game, however, has been introduced for two hands, which, while it undoubtedly is not so good as a four handed game, still it is moderately interesting, and affords a chance for the display of a good deal of skill.

The game is played by dealing the entire pack to the two players. The cards are picked up indiscriminately and each player places in a row before him thirteen piles of cards. He begins by placing the first card face downward on the table, and the next one face upward on top of the first card laid down. This operation is repeated until the thirteen piles are built by each player. This leaves thirteen cards exposed on the table on each side, and thirteen, the value of which are not known, as the faces are turned downward.

The play then begins with the non-dealer, and the game is carried through the same as in an ordinary game of whist. As soon as the card which is exposed is played, and the trick on which it is played is taken, the card underneath is also turned up. This process finally causes all the cards to be exposed, but, of course, not until the game is well along toward the close. Consequently there is always enough uncertainty about the value of your opponent's hand and the strength of your own, to allow a good deal of conjecture and thoughtful playing. The game has not been introduced extensively at present, and in many whist clubs it seems to be practically unknown, and in some of them entirely so.

Choate and Lauterbach.

The Hon. Joseph H. Choate and the Hon. Edward Lauterbach were associated in a suit a short time ago and won. As the jury left their seats Mr. Lauterbach turned to Mr. Choate and said:

"Choate, we won this verdict because we happened to know more law on this subject than our adversaries."

"Yes?" queried Choate.

"Our clients are rich, you know, a corporation and all that," rejoined Lauterbach?"

"Yes?" again replied Choate. "What do you think we ought to charge, Lauterbach?"

"Oh, $750 apiece."

"Tut, tut," broke out Choate, impatiently, and he repeated: "Tut, tut! You let me handle this bill, Lauterbach, I'll collect for us both."

A short time afterward Mr. Lauterbach was in Mr. Choate's office in Wall street, and Mr. Choate handed out a check for $1,500 as Mr. Lauterbach's fee in the case, and said:

"Lauterbach, what do you think of that?"

Mr. Lauterbach looked at the check, stroked his beard for an instant, and, looking intently at Choate, replied:

"Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

Bismarck was an impetuous and persistent lover, who bore down all the obstacles thrown in the way of his marriage. It was his earnest, quick witted and gentle wife who made a man out of the reckless, roystering young giant—the hero of thirty duels and apparently the most hopeless ne'er-do-well at his university.

THE DAY OF SMALL BEGINNINGS.

A Business Man's Address to New York Editors.

Mr. George H. Daniels, general passenger agent of the New York Central Railroad, delivered an address to the editors of New York State at their annual outing at Lake George. Among other things he said:

"With a view to lending variety to what might otherwise be a dull and monotonous effort, I have selected as the basis of some very brief, but, I trust, pertinent, remarks, a subject from the writings of Zachariah: 'Despise not the day of small things.'

"In the winter of '40 or the spring of '50, a young boy, fresh from a farm, and beaming with the ingenuous enthusiasm so characteristic of the country, entered the office of the publisher of Le Roy Standard and asked if they wanted a boy. A few minutes' conversation satisfied the publisher, who was a judge of human nature, that this particular boy would, if he lived, grow to be a man, and possibly a man of considerable ability, for during his brief conversation the boy had stated that he intended to become a great journalist, the owner of a daily paper, with a large circulation, in which he would be able to compliment his friends and roast his enemies in a style that would attract general attention in the neighborhood in which the paper was published.

"After some preliminaries in regard to bonds, moral character, etc., on both sides, the boy was engaged to fold the papers at one cent a quire, the standing order for paper in the office at that time being twenty-four quires a week. With an enterprise which was indicative of future greatness, this youth, who 'despised not the day of small things,' undertook in a very short time after his appointment to increase the circulation of the paper, and within six months, by diligent efforts at odd hours when he could get away from his arduous duties, he had secured twenty-four additional subscribers, and, beginning with the seventh month, he received the princely salary of twenty-five cents a week.

"You will observe that the maximum order for paper in the most prosperous times was twenty-five quires, making a total circulation of 600, although the publisher placed at the head of his editorial columns the announcement that his was the greatest family paper in Western New York, with the largest circulation in eleven counties, and stated (but this was merely a bluff) that his business manager would make an affidavit at any time that the circulation was between 8,000 and 9,000 per week, making, of course, the finest advertising medium to be found anywhere outside of the metropolis.

"There is an old saying among the Persians that "aspirations are prophecies which need only faith to fulfill." The case of the young man above described is a proof of the Persian proverb.

"The boy who at that early day did so much to increase the circulation of the paper with which he was connected, is an honored member of this association, a friend of everybody, and the enemy of no man. I refer to Mr. E. H. Butler, the proprietor of the Buffalo News.

"On a fine morning in the month of May, about forty years ago, there was born in the beautiful Mohawk Valley a child, destined to wield a great influence in the journalistic world; from an early age he displayed a taste for all sorts of comic pictures. When only a very little lad he would sit for hours turning over the leaves of a patent medicine almanac, which contained pictures of an alleged humorous character, interspersed with jokes, more or less ancient, generally more than less. He often annoyed his parents by asking the explanation of these jokes, and became the admiration of all the country round on account of his remarkable appreciation of everything ludicrous.

"His earliest literary efforts were a series of jokes upon the inhabitants of the Mohawk Valley and the boatmen on the canal, published in 1867 in the Mohawk Valley Clarion and Banner of Liberty, at Canajoharie.

"These were the days of small things with our youthful editor, but with a determination which knew no defeat he labored on in his chosen field, and while still a boy became, with the gentleman who has just retired from the presidency of this association, the proprietor of one of the great daily journals at the capital of the State.

"From Albany to New York is only three hours and fifteen minutes by the Empire State Express, and the next step up the shining ladder of journalism was soon taken. To-day his name, and the names of his great journals are household words wherever the English language is spoken; another evidence of the truth of the Persian proverb in regard to aspirations.

"You, of course, know I refer to W. J. Arkell, publisher of Judge and Leslie's Weekly.

"Who would have thought that the Mohawk Valley boy, poring over an old comic almanac or Joe Miller's joke book by the dim but malodorous light of a kerosene lamp, in the days when the Standard Oil Company was struggling for an existence, would one day become the head and front of one of the greatest comic papers of the age?

"It is said that it is just as natural for Mr. Arkell to write jokes for Judge as it is for some country editors to clip them out and publish them without credit.

"Just here I would like to offer a word of advice to the members of this association:

"First—'Despise not the day of small things.' Remember that most of the papers had a very small beginning. Lend a helping hand to those who are just commencing and who necessarily have to begin in a small way. Some day they may have influential journals.

Second—Do not overwork yourselves. The tendency of this age is to deep and continuous thought. Do not try to accomplish everything. There are others

CHAPTER III.

It was an October evening nine years later: the woods had glowed in their red and yellow splendor all day long, the sun had set in a rivalry of glory, and now it was getting so cool that a few logs were piled on the wide hearth, and a fire kindled. The pitch-pine sticks began to crackle, and to ooze at the ends, the blue smoke whirled upwards in the huge draught of the chimney, and Nancy and Nellie, having cleared away the supper things, were seated in a small and in a big chair, side by side, face to the blaze. Nellie's head leaned against Nancy's substantial knee; her silky hair, which showed some of the colors of the golden flame at which she was gazing, or of the maple leaves which she had gathered a great bunch of that afternoon, shone in the flickering light with a lovely radiance. Nancy sat back in her chair with her stout arms folded across her ample waist. Never was there an old maid who looked the conventional type less than she. She was rosy, dimpled, plump and cheery yet she was not only a spinster of near fifty, but she had met with nothing but misfortune all her life. It is a marvel what some folks can thrive on!

But Nancy had in her bosom the innocent and kindly child's heart which was born with her; she was as much a child as the little girl beside her. Troubles could draw tears from her readily enough; but nothing could make her bitter or sullen. Her nature was of the summer quality sometimes reverting to April, but never contracting into winter. Truly, she was not armed to contend with the artful and selfish world; yet the world could not hurt her. Her vital spots were beyond the world's reach.

Being of such a make, she and Nellie were full companions for each other. They were a pair of children. Things which to others would have been foolish and trivial, interested them, and made the subject of their confidential talks. Each loved the sound of the other's voice, and was secure in the other's sympathy. It is wonderful what a mutual comprehension love gives; the reason is perhaps because it so simplifies and illuminates the ordinary confusion and obscurity of ideas. We are ourselves the artificers of most of the riddles that perplex us.

"Nellie, you wouldn't have cared for me to marry that old Lawyer Corvin, would you, lovey?"

"Ugh!" said Nellie, prolonging a guttural of disgust. "He's horrid! You don't have to, do you?"

"No: but he asked me this a'ternoon:" she gave a chuckling little laugh. "I declare, I wonder what ailed the man. He use to be spoonin' around 'bout twenty or thirty years ago; but I was young and smart then, and we was rich; and anyway, I was fancyin' som'un else myself. So I said to him to-day, I says, 'Whatever ails you, Mr. Corvin? I guess may be you used to want me for the sake of my money,' I says; 'but now,' I says, 'you've got the money, and what under the canopy would you be wanting of me?' So I laughed. But I thought to myself, thinks I, 'Well, I guess I wouldn't marry a man that was the cause of my dear boy Tom gettin' drowned', not to speak of what folks said about my poor brother Matt: not that I b'lieve myself it was jest Mr. Corvin's fault, you know; but one feels things that way. I didn't tell him that; it's no use hurting folks feelin's."

"What did he say?"

"Well, he sort o' come out, then; he says, 'That's jest it,' he says; 'you ain't got no money, an' I hate to have it that way, but what can I do?' he says. 'Here I've been lendin' you money these ten years back, Nancy,' he says, 'on the s'curity of your land an' cattle an' stuff,' he says; 'an' now you ain't got nothin' more to pledge, and I'll have to foreclose on that mortgage to-morrow,' he says. 'An' what I thought was, Nancy, if you'd have me, it would make it all smooth and nice,' he says, 'for I was al'ays fond o' you, you know; an' now I've been a widower five year, an' everythin's ready for you, ef you'll come,' he says. 'An' ef you don't, upon my word, I don't see how you're a-goin' to get on anyway,' he says."

"He hasn't got this house, though, has he?" asked the child.

"No, lovey, he ain't: an' that's what I told him; an' I said I'd starve in it sooner'n sell it, for it was Billops' house ever sence 'twas built, an' I don't consider I've any right to make away with it while I live. An' I told him, may be the folks around would give me work to do; anyhow, marry, I couldn't. By'n by he said, 'Well, I'm sorry to foreclose,' he says; 'but I can't help it; I need some cash to put into a new investment,' he says; an' then he went on to tell about a man had come to town with a new invention—some way of making crops grow with 'lectricity, but I didn't understand how 'twas. Mr. Corvin, he wanted to buy the stock of the invention, and had to have cash. So he said ef I wouldn't marry him, and didn't have the money for the mortgage to-morrow, why he'd be sorry, but he'd jest be obliged to sell up the farm an' fixin's. So I said, 'Well, ef you have to do it, sell away, Mr. Corvin,' I says; 'an' don't you bother 'bout Nellie an' me,' I says; 'I guess the Lord'll look out after us, some way:' an' then I told him I'd have to be gettin' the dinner ready, an' asked him would he stay? But he said no, an' so off he went."

"Do you thing the Lord will take us to Heaven, now we have no money?" Nellie enquired.

"Oh, well, I guess we'll get on all right down here for a spell yet, lovey." Nancy replied, cheerfully. "I'll trot over to the village to-morrow, and see ef may be I can't get somethin' to do—cookin', or sewin', or such like. There's a good long bit between you an' me an' starvin', my pet; an' we al'ays got the old house to live in, you know—thanks be!"

Nellie made no rejoinder, and they sat silent. The fire fell into red embers, on a cushion of white ash. The wind rose, without, and the boughs of the great trees swept across the roof of the house with a swishing sound, as if caressing the venerable building over which they had stood guard so long. How many generations of Billops had that soothing sound hushed to sleep! Nancy was beginning to nod, when suddenly she felt Nellie start slightly, and saw that she had lifted her head and was listening intently.

"What is it, lovey? Rats?"

"Music!" whispered Nellie "There—don't you hear?"

Nancy uttered a faint cry, and sat rigid. Music! It was unmistakeable. At first a light and airy strain, rising and falling with the breeze, like the notes of an aeolian harp. It was a fitful, undulating call, as of fairy minstrels signalling with elfin horns. But presently it assumed a measured form: it gathered itself into a diatonic melody, warbling delectably. What made it? Where did it come from? After a moment, Nellie jumped up, ran to the window, and threw it open. In came the crisp cold air; the stars sparkled; the music sounded more distinct, but still aerial and remote. It was impossible to determine whence it came. It sounded now here, now there. Sometimes it seemed to emanate from the listener's own heart.

"Oh, isn't it good! Oh, don't let it stop!" murmured Nellie, with groans of delight.

But it did stop, almost as if out of contrariness. A last note swelled out, and went off in a diminuendo, and sank into silence.

"Oh, do-o let it play some more!" she sighed, as if the invisible orchestra could be propitiated by entreaty. "Mammy, you ask 'em!"

Nancy had all this while remained in her chair, in a state of breathless agitation. She now managed to find a weak and quivering voice. "Come away from that window, child! Lovey, it's ghosts, the same as used to be when your Uncle Matt was livin'. Oh, my sakes—what a turn it give me!"

"Ghosts?" said Nellie, stepping back from the window, in momentary dismay. But she recovered herself. "If ghosts can make such nice sounds as that, I like them."

"It won't play no more this time, once it stops," said Nancy. "I rec'lect how't used to be well enough! It 'ud play a bit, an' then stop, an' then 'times it 'ud say somethin', and then you wouldn't hear no more. That's how 'twas when poor Matt was livin', an' I guess this is the same ghost."

"But did it ever do any harm to Uncle Matt? Didn't he like it?" enquired the child.

"I don' know as he ever act'ly heard it himself: it 'ud mostly come when I'd be alone, an' he off on his bus'ness, som'ers. When I'd tell him about it, he'd look grave, an' then he'd say, 'Well, ance,' he'd say, 'mind you al'ays listen what it says,' he'd say, 'an' whatever it says, mind you do it: for ghost knows more'n we do,' he'd say. All the same, it scared me awful."

"May be it isn't ghosts, but fairies—good fairies, and they mean to do us good somehow. Didn't they do Uncle Matt good?"

"Well, I b'lieve he did sort of foller what they said, when I wasn't too scared to recollect it, an' he used to say, 'times, that the Voices, as he called 'em, was as good for his bus'ness as what a spellin' book is for a child learnin' to read. But all the same, I'm scared of what I can't see, and don't know what it is; an' al'ays thought it was them ghosts that carried poor Matt off, myster'ous like, at last."

"May be they'll bring him back again, then, and he'll make Mr. Corvin stop troubling us."

Nancy shook her head. "Ghosts is ghosts, lovey; they may be good or bad; but I never heard as they was able to pay folks' debts for 'em. Ef they could do that, I don't say but what I . . . Sakes alive!"

The cause of this ejaculation was not supernatural, but material. There was a heavy thump on the hearth, and the wood ashes flew out into the room. Some heavy object had fallen down the chimney, and struck amongst the smouldering embers. The next instant a light blaze broke out, burnt actively for a minute or so, and then died down.

"Land sakes! it jest makes me sick! Must be a brick out of the chimney, I s'pose. But what was that burned up so? It didn't sound like a brick, neither."

Nellie picked up a thin stick, and poked among the ashes. "Why, Mammy, it's money—a whole lot of it!" she presently exclaimed. "It was done up in paper, and that's what burnt."

"Money, child? You're crazy! Whatever would money be doin' in our old chimney?"

"But it is money," persisted Nellie; and with that she raked out a couple of ten dollar gold pieces. "Oh, do see—what a lot of 'em!" She continued raking out gold and silver coins, and brushing away the ashes. There were scores of them—hundreds of them. "We're rich, now, ain't we, Mammy: you can pay Mr. Corvin, to-morrow and make him go away," said the child, looking up smiling with excitement and pleasure.

Nancy, her simple soul rent between fear, curiosity, and half-incredulous joy, got down on her knees on the hearthstone, and picked up one of the gold-pieces between her thumb and finger.

"It's real true gold, jest as sure's you're alive," she murmured: "an' the same kind of coin poor Matt used to like to have about him. 'Gold eagles don't fly away as easy as other kinds,' was what he used to say. Well, it don't seem like it could be real, does it? 'Tis, though, all the same! But I don't know—may be the money ain't jestly ours, a'ter all. We don't know where it come from, an' ef we was to use it, and then som'un was to come along and say it was theirs, what 'd we do?"

"Why, Mammy, who would keep money up our chimney, if it wasn't ours?" said Nellie, with better sense than grammer. She kept on raking treasure out of the embers with untroubled enjoyment. "Uncle Matt must have put 'em there, and made 'em fall down just when we wanted them."

"Hark!" cried Nancy.

A whisper—a sigh—a voice, filling their ears, coming from they knew not where, slowly uttering speech, and dying away into silence.

"For you, Nance—for you and her—pay the debt—pay the debt—your brother Matt sends it—pay the debt, and free the land, and give me peace."

"Well, now, Mr. Morford, I don t jest like you should talk that way," said Nancy to her visitor the next morning. "it's a real mir'cle: and real mir'cles is like religion—I think they be. So I don't like you should poke fun at it. You city folks don't never want to be serious ef you can help it, I know: but there 'tis. It dropped right down out of Heaven, through our chimney, an' jest at the very time we needed it the worst, too; and then there was my poor brother Matt's voice a-sayin' he'd sent it a purpose to pay off Mr. Corvin, and free the mortgage. An' that's what I'm a-goin' to do the first minute Mr. Corvin calls here this day; an' my sakes! won't that man jest be surprised! I guess he won't b'lieve where we got it, no more'n you do—may be less."

Mr. Morford, it should be said, was the young man with the patent electrical inventi n, who was making the rounds of the neighborhood to get subscribers to his stock. When he had knocked at the door that morning Nancy had supposed it must be Corvin, come for his mortgage money, and opened to him with her rosy face dimpling with pleasant anticipation. Explanations had ensued, Mr. Morford had introduced his business, and had soon created so pleasant an impression that the conversation became easy. Nancy was far too full of her miracle, and far too unversed in wordly caution, to withhold the story; though Mr. Morford wore city clothes, and had a rather satirical expression about the corners of his mouth occasionally, still there was something about the look in his eyes, and his general bearing, that inspired confidence. At all events, she unfolded her guileless heart, and in the course of half an hour had told him at least as much of her history as the patient reader has learned in all these painful days. Nellie, after studying the young man with the silent profoundity of childhood for ten or fifteen minutes, had also decided to like him, and had presented him with a bunch of gorgeous sugar-maple leaves.

"I'm not a spectic, nor an infidel, Miss Billop," said Mr. Morford. "I like to see the bottom of things if I can; and there are miracles enough without needing to have so'd money fall out of the sky. Have you searched the garret and——"

"Search'ed? Well, jest you ask Nellie. Ef there's a square foot o' space inside this house or outside of it that she ain't poked that little nose of hers into, I don't know! An' there ain't no trace of nothin', nor nobody, not nowheres. An' then as for the music an' the voice, I don't know how you'd get around them!"

"Is what I hear in the village true—that Matthew Billop disappeared mysteriously?—that his manner of death was never known?"

"Yes, but he's dead, poor Matt, I guess," said Nancy, with a sigh; "ef he warn't, I'd a heard from him before this; an' then again, of what some thought was true—that he'd head foul play from—well, from any one, I'd a heard of it too, from his sperrit, ef no ways else. I was thinkin' last night, after he'd sent that money, that ef he'd been murdered, he'd a said so then. But all he said was, 'Pay Corvin,' he says, 'an' I'll be at peace;' so I guess he died nat'ral. An' though Matt was a real good brother to me, an' I al'ays loved him right hearty, yet I don't mourn after him like I would ef he hadn't been a man past his prime, as had lived an' had his fling, an' I don't doubt is happier now than ef he were here with us. But it's different 'bout Tom: I never can get used to lose on that dear precious boy. He was the cutest, smartest, best boy ever did live, an' I couldn't have loved him more not ef he'd been my . . . . . An' I ain't never felt the same woman sence I lost him; an' it may be wickedness, but I do say I ain't never been able to forgive Mr. Corvin for the part he took in runnin' Tom to his death. In course he didn't mean it; but still . . . . . Mr. Corvin might a' sold me up an' I don't bear him no grudge 'bout not payin' the money he owed Matt, 'cause the paper that showed the debt was lost with Matt, and men of bus'ness nat'rally don't pay more'n they have to: but when I think of my darlin' Tom drowned jest because they found money in his pockets that he'd never in this earth put there himself . . . . . Well, Mr. Morford, I don't know what you'll thing of an old woman like me to be crying 'bout it after these nine years; but I love my Tom jest the same as ef I'd seen him yesterday."

"Then you feel quite sure the boy never stole the money?" said Mr. Morford, after a pause, in a gentle tone.

"That boy steal? It'll be the happiest day of my life, Mr. Morford, when I meet him in Heaven, and hear all the angels standin' roun' there say, 'You was right, Nancy; there ain't none innocenter than him there!'"

"It ought to make him happy to hear you say that, wherever he is," said Mr. Morford, getting up and walking to the window. "It would be a good thing if you could find the I. O. U. for the money your brother lent Corvin, wouldn't it?" he added, presently, turning round.

"Well, I'm thankful enough to be able to pay him, without his paying me: and land sakes!" she observed, with a laugh, "I guess it 'ud go agin' the poor man's grain to have to do it."

"He'll be here in a few minutes," said Morford. "I just saw him turn in at the foot of the hill. Now, look here, Miss Billop, if I were you, when you pay him the money, I wouldn't tell him anything about how it came to you; just let him guess all he wants to. It's none of his business; and may be the spirit of your brother may have some other surprises in store for him, that would be interfered with if you were to say anything now. While you're doing your affair with him, I'd like Nellie to show me round the place a bit, outside. Will you do it, Nellie? I saw a jolly cave underneath there as I came up; I'd like to explore it."

"Come," said Nellie, with an air of gracious proprietorship, "I'll show you;" and they went out at the rear door, hand in hand, just as Mr. Corvin, all unsuspicous of astonishment awaiting him, was admitted at the front.

BRYANT'S [illegible]

It Was an Ideal Union Between the Poet and His Wife.

Allusion has already been made to his marriage. None could have been happier, no union more nearly an ideal one. Miss Fanny Fairchild was a young lady whose parents lived on the Seaconet, a steam trading river to the Green River, not far from Great Barrington.

Early left an orphan, she made her home alternately with her married sisters in that place, and it was there that Bryant met her. Charming in person, sweet in disposition, lovely in character, she drew him to her through his sympathy with her orphanage, his admiration of her beauty, and his appreciation of her worth.

For 45 years she was the stay and blessing of his life. What that marriage was to him they knew best who knew him best. Reserved on the subject to the world at large, he allowed only those who were nearest him to know the wonderful depth and tenderness of his affection. Their sympathy was perfect, their dependence mutual.

He said at her death:

"I never wrote a poem that I did not repeat it to her and take her judgment upon it. I found its success with the public to be precisely in proportion to the impression it made upon her."

A dear friend of them both has said:

"The union between Mr. and Mrs. Bryant was a poem of the tenderest rhythm. Any of us who remember Mr. Bryant's voice when he said 'Frances' will join in his hope that she kept the same beloved name in heaven. I remember alluding to those exquisite lines 'The Future Life,' to Mrs. Bryant, and her replying:

"'Oh, my dear, I am always very sorry for any one who sees me after reading those lines, they must be so disappointed.'

"Beatrice and Laura have not received such tributes from their poets, for Mrs. Bryant's husband was her poet and lover at seventy and seventeen."—Century.

A Compromise.

Prosecuting Attorney John T. Dare and opposing counsel exchanged a few hot words yesterday morning.

"Mr. Dare, sit down," ordered Judge Joachimsen.

"Your honor, I prefer to attend to my duties on my feet, as a respectful attorney should," replied Dare.

"Mr. Dare, sit down!" shouted the judge, now thoroughly angry, and Mr. Dare saw that it was necessary to hedge a little to bolster his bluff.

"Your honor, I don't know why I should be singled out," said Dare, "and I must therefore decline to sit down. I would, however, obey a general order for every one in the court room to be seated," he suggested by way of a compromise, though he was the only one in the court room who was standing.

"Everybody sit down!" roared the judge, who had been bluffing himself and was only too glad to accept the compromise. Mr. Dare took his seat respectfully and the business of the court proceeded harmoniously.—San Francisco Post.

No Deadhead Seeds this Year.

The usual general distribution of seeds by the Agricultural Department will not take place next year. An opinion was given by Attorney-General Onley some time ago that as the law provided for furnishing rare seeds for scientific purposes, Secretary Morton was not compelled to expend the appropriation made in distributing common seeds. Secretary Morton has always opposed the general free seed distribution, which has become one of the regular duties of the Agricultural Department and of Congressmen, and under the authority of the Attorney-General's opinion during this fiscal year he will inaugurate a reform and supply no seeds save for scientific purposes.

A Libel on Some Good People.

Advertising schemes are as numerous and bold as the ways of the heathen Chinese are dark and his tricks are vain. Some of the advertisers are ready to serve the devil in the guise of the saint. A Washington street saloon keeper, located not far from Bolyston street, had the audacity recently to display the sign: "Christian Endeavor Punch." A passing policeman was filled with righteous wrath such as only Boston policemen can feel. Entering the saloon he said:

"You'll have to take that sign in."

"I guess not," said the saloon keeper; "there aint't no law compelling me to."

"That's all right," answered the officer, "but I guess you better take it in," with a note of stern suggestiveness in his voice.

"What for?" again demanded the saloon keeper.

"Well, you may have some trouble next year in getting your license," replied the officer, quietly. "If you haven't any idea of decency, perhaps the Commioners may teach you."—Boston Record.

The Suffragist's Strength.

"There is one thing about women," said the Rev. Anna Shaw at the recent suffrage convention in California, "they never know when they are whipped. After we have one defeat we take a good night's sleep and then get up and go at it again. That's one reason why woman's suffrage is not yet downed, and it will probably be the chief reason for its eventual success."

It was at the same convention that Miss Anthony announced that she expected to die voteless. "The State of New York," she said, "will be the very last to let women vote, and my roots are too deeply planted to become a citizen of any other State. But it won't be long before the women of California and the more progressive commonwealths will be voting for all they are worth."

MRS. FERNANDEZ HAS LEFT.

MANY COMPLICATIONS WOULD BE STRAIGHTENED BY HER RETURN.

Went Away Owing Many Bills, But the Debtors Expect to Get Their Money—She Talked of Going to California.

What promises to be quite an interesting complication has arisen in the bofough which apparently can only be settled satisfactorily to all parties by the return of Mrs. Ula Fernandez, who left her home at 110 Park place a week ago today and of whom nothing has been heard since.

Last Thursday, Mrs. Fernandez and her little two-year-old daughter left here with several trunks. John Gill, who had had charge of her summer residence at Dog Corners, and Miss Maggie Nugent, the nurse who has cared for the little girl, accompanied her to New York, where they all spent Wednesday night at a hotel. On Thursday, Miss Nugent told a Daily Press reporter this morning, Mrs. Fernandez sent her with a message to Plainfield and that when she returned the party was missing. She went to the station, but found that her own as well as her mistress' trunks had disappeared also.

"She told me some time ago that she was going to remarry her former husband, W. F. Fernandez," said Miss Nugent, "and was going south with him where he was to take a new position." Supposing, of course, that it was all right, Miss Nugent returned and waited.

Saturday Miss Nugent's suspicions became aroused and she went to Brooklyn to see Mr. Fernandez, who is superintendent of the Edison Electric Light Works on Lexington avenue. When she found him, he said that he had seen nothing of his former wife and then the two started on a hunt for the missing woman which proved unsuccessful.

When Miss Nugent returned, he said that he wished it contradicted that he was to remarry his former wife.

Saturday night John Gill came to Plainfield with Miss Nugent's trunk which he left here, leaving Plainfield on the next train.

"Was the trunk all right?" inquired The Press reporter.

"Yes, except a letter that she wrote to me once, which was missing," was the reply. In answer to the question of whether the letter contained anything important, she said "Yes, it made me the guardian of the child, which is an adopted one."

Some time ago, Mrs. Fernandez remarked to a friend that she was getting tired of Plainfield, and that she was not going to stay here any longer, but would probably spend the winter in California.

When she went away she was in debt to the nurse about $14, and also owed Mrs. L. Adams, the East Front street millinery, about $70. There were a number of other smaller debts which, with those already mentioned, amounted to about $200. At the time of Mrs. Fernandez's departure she was supposed to possess a horse, two buggies and the household effects at her home on Park place. The creditors immediately issued a writ of attachment and retained George W. DeMeza to look after their interests. But now Adam C. Blair, the liveryman, through his counsel, Judge W. A. Coddington, says that she sold the horse, buggies and the household effects to him previous to her departure.

Mr. Coddington told a Daily Press reporter yesterday afternoon that he thought that Mrs. Fernandez would return soon and settle all the trouble, as there seems to be no reason for her departing without a settlement with her creditors as she has an independent income of her own and has influential and wealthy relatives.

District Convention.

The fall convention of the Elizabeth district meeting of the Epworth League will be held at Somerville on Thursday, October 24th. Each chapter in the district will be entitled to four delegates who will be entertained by the Somerville chapter.

Fell Off His Safety.

While riding his safety on Craig place yesterday George Summers fell off and severely injured his right leg. He succeeded in getting to his home although his leg was very sore.

A. M. Bailey, a well-known citizen of Eugene, Oregon, says his wife has for years been troubled with chronic diarrhoea and used many remedies with little relief until she tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and diarrhoea Remedy, which has cured her sound and well. COLORED BAPTISTS CONVENE.

The Board Meets and Decides in Favor of Home Missions.

Another division of the Baptist church meets here in convention today and tomorrow. It is the Afro-American Baptist Association, which is now holding its annual State convention at the Mt. Olive Baptist church on Liberty street. A large number of delegates are already present and many more are expected. The board of managers of the association met this morning at ten o'clock to review the mission work done. It was found that there are fifty colored Baptist churches in this district, and that each is giving from seven to ten dollars toward missionary work in other fields. While in the vast field for work in New Jersey, there are no missionaries, and the churches give no money to aid in the work, except in a very scattering manner. It was the sentiment of the assembly that all unite together and lend their aid toward a little home missionary work.

The introductory sermon was delivered this afternoon at two o'clock by Rev. Wm. Perry, of Montclair. Then followed the election of officers of the association for the ensuing year.

Dinner was served for the delegates in the lecture room, and was looked after by the entertainment committee, Mrs. Wm. H. Manning, Mrs. P. S. Gibson, Mrs. L. Scott, Mrs. Nathan Thornton and Wm. H. Manning.

Tomorrow, L. J. Pollard, whom the First Baptist church of this city, assisted to work his way through the Richmond Theological Seminary, will be ordained.

BIG DELEGATION GOING.

Christian Endeavorers Will Go Forth to Win at Atlantic City.

How can Plainfield secure the '96 State Convention of Christian Endeavor? First, those who have the power of deciding where the convention of '96 shall be held, must understand Plainfield is in earnest and really wants the convention. Second, it must be demonstrated that the Colorado of the East is well suited both as to accommodations, churches, hotels, boarding houses, etc., and as to easiness of access.

Everyone knows of the arrangements which the local union has made for conveying the delegates from this locality to Atlantic City next month when the '95 State Convention takes place. As already published, two hotels will be at the disposal of the party from Plainfield, and the cost of the entire trip will be extremely small. With such provision, a large number ought to go from Plainfield, and thus show their desire to have the next convention in their own city. A large representation at the '95 will do much towards securing the '96.

Run Into by a Wheel.

"Accidents will happen in the best regulated families," is an old saying, and yesterday afternoon shortly before six o'clock Herbert Chamberlain, of that very well regulated family, the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, accidentally ran over little Eddie Cooper, son of Howard Cooper, foreman for M. Quinn, the East Fourth street blacksmith. Mr. Chamberlain was riding down East Fourth street on his wheel when he saw the lad in the road. He rang his bell and tried to turn out of the way, but the little fellow was frightened and ran the wrong way. He was not seriously injured by the tumble, however.

Greder Property Sold.

The Greder property located on Second, Third and Berckman streets, was sold yesterday afternoon by H. Hand, the auctioneer. The house and lot was purchased by Casper Fuchs, who paid $700. The six building lots were purchased by Milton Meeker, who also paid about $700.

To Be Put in Old Time Condition.

Work has been started on Johnson's drive by Frank Mobus, representing the township of North Plainfield. The drive will be greatly improved and put in the same condition as it was a number of years ago, when it was such a favorite resort for carriage parties.

Y. M. C. A. Workers to Picnic.

The various committees of the Y. M. C. A. will have their annual fall outing on Saturday afternoon, the 28th, at Johnston's drive. The members of the committees are requested to meet at the Y. M. C. A. building at three o'clock in order to join the party.

Soon to be Settled.

It is thought probable that inside of thirty days the affairs of Music Hall Association will have been settled and the shareholders will be paid whatever is due them, which is not expected to make any of them very rich.

EXTRA!

THE DEMOCRATS IN SESSION.

THE STATE CONVENTION HELD AT TRENTON TODAY.

It Looks as Though Chancellor McGill Will be the Nominee—Organization of Union and Somerset Delegates.

Trenton, N. J., 3 p. m.

Chancellor Alex. T. McGill was nominated on the first ballot as candidate for Governor on the first ballot at the Democratic convention this afternoon at 3:50.

Trenton, September 26th.—There was such a strong leaning towards Chancellor Alexander T. McGill this morning among the delegates to the Democratic State convention assembled here that the leaders conceded his nomination for Governor on the first ballot. The Cutler boom went all to pieces except in Warren, Hunterdon and Sussex counties.

It was estimated at ten o'clock this morning that Cutler would not receive 150 votes, all told, in the convention. The South Jersey delegates will do very little for him. Hudson will cast her 157 votes as a unit for McGill, and Cutler will not get more than 36 of Essex's 143 votes. Assemblyman Al paugh, of Hunterdon, thought that McGill would be nominated before Hunterdon was called and thus settle the difficulty there.

Allen McDermott, Chairman of the State Committee, called the convention to order, and Samuel Kalisch, of Newark, was chosen temporary chairman. The speech of Mr. Kalisch was received with great applause. Notwithstanding the fact that the Republicans were confident of victory, he predicted the usual Democratic success in New Jersey. He ridiculed the work of the reform committee of the Senate and argued that as yet none of the persons indicted through their investigations had been convicted of the charges against him.

Ex-Senator M. Barrett and Francis B. Lee were made secretaries.

After a temporary organization was formed the convention took a recess until two o'clock when Judge Carrow, of Camden county, who was made permanent chairman, call the convention to order.

The Union county delegation elected William Oliver as their chairman and the following to represent them on the committees: On credentials, P. Egenolf; on organization, J. Connolly, on resolutions, Thomas Lane; on rules, A. B. Cook.

M. H. Vanderveer was made chairman of the Somerset county delegation, and the following delegates were selected for the committees: On credentials, D. J. Carney; on rules, G. Cramer; on organization, W. J. Keys; on resolutions, C. M. Hoagland.

Frederick P. Olcott was elected a member of the State executive committee.

Mr. Leal's School.

Young men and boys over sixteen years of age, who cannot attend school during the entire session, and who wish to take such studies as will speedily prepare them for business, are informed that they may enter classes already formed in book-keeping, penmanship, English, rhetoric composition and commercial arithmetic. Should there be a sufficient number of applicants for instruction in shorthand, an expert stenographer will direct the class. Instruction in all these branches is given by teachers whose ability is unquestioned. This work will occupy about two and a half hours per day, and the rates of tuition will be made known on application.

Completing Arrangements.

Rev. Mr. Davis, Fred Voorhees, of Bound Brook, E. E. Anthohy and J. Hawkins, of Plainfield, committee from this section for the Christian Endeavor State convention, met in this city last night to complete arrangements for the trip of those who are going from this part of the State.

—Miss Julia E. Bulkley will make an address at the High School tomorrow morning.

John G. Mauger Editor of the Sunbeam, Seligman, Mo., who named Grover Cleveland for the Presidency in November 1882, while he was Mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says: "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as staple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

HELD UP BY FIVE MEN.

FRANK MONCTON HAD AN EXCITING ADVENTURE LAST NIGHT.

The Highwaymen, With Clubs in Their Hands, Went Through His Pockets, But Gained No Booty—Who Were They?

George Moncton, who works for Mrs. John Brown, proprietor of the Odorless Excavating Company, had an experience last night about twelve o'clock that was far from pleasant.

He and several other men were working in the rear of Charles Smith's saloon on West Front street, Moncton driving the wagon. About 11:30 he left town with a load of refuse to take below the city line on Park avenue where such material is left.

He got along all right until he reached the woods just this side of the city line, when without any warning five men jumped out into the road, all carrying clubs.

Moncton's team was stopped and held, while three of the men mounted the wagon in search of anything they could find. They went through his pockets, in spite of the fact that Moncton told them that he had nothing. After being satisfied that such was the case they went back in the woods to wait for some other victim.

Moncton proceeded on his journey and then came back to Plainfield thoroughly frightened. He refused to go out again.

The matter was reported to the police, but they were unable to do anything as the place was too far out.

A MORNING BLAZE.

A Gasoline Stove Sets the Kitchen of Isaac R. Giles on Fire.

The residents of the Second ward were rudely awakened from their morning nap this morning at about 6:10 by a fire alarm sent in from Box 25. Those that rushed to the box were directed to the house of Isaac R. Giles, of 315 East Sixth street, where the kitchen was all ablaze.

Early this morning Mrs. Giles filled the gasoline stove and wiped it off with a rag which she put to one side. Then she lighted the stove but it did not work as it should, and the next instant the room was filled with flames. The fire spread from the blazing rag and stove to a clothes horse filled with freshly ironed garments which also blazed up. Mrs. Giles seeing that she couldn't extinguish the flames, left the room to give the alarm to the rest of the family.

John Ross, of East Sixth street, was the first one outside of the house to learn of the fire and came at once to the rescue. David Smalley, of Smalley Brothers, who resides across the street also came with several of his men to render their assistance, while Letter-Carrier VanWinkle who happend by sent in an alarm from Box 25. But before the fire department could reach the scene of the fire a large tub of water brought from Mr. Smalley's extinguished the flames.

The clothes on the clothes horse were all badly burned, while the woodwork in the kitchen was slightly charred. The walls in the dining room were also blistered, while several other rooms were blackened with smoke. The entire damage done is estimated at about $150 which will be fully covered by insurance secured through the agency of William A. Woodruff.

Middlesex Court Cases.

Two cases come up in the Middlesex county circuit court at New Brunswick today which are of interest to Plainfielders. The first is Johnson against Cole, on contract, appealed from Justice Huff and jury. George W. DeMeza appears for Johnson, and Judge W. A. Coddington for Cole. The other case is Keratzel against Seader, in tort, appealed from Justice Storms and a jury. Judge W. A. Coddington is the counsel for the plaintiff, and George W. DeMeza for the defendant.

Realize the Fact.

Did you ever realize what good peaches were? Perhaps you think you have but make sure of it by going to Neuman Brothers. They have peaches that are peaches. Prices low and quality excellent.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmrcy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

WORK AMONG THE SLUMS.

Miss Potter Speaks Very Interestingly of Her Work and Illustrates It.

The slums of New York and mission work among them, was the subject of a very interesting stereopticon lecture in the lecture room of the Park Avenue Baptist church last evening. Miss Ellie Potter, of the Morning Star Mission, spoke very interestingly, while the instrument was run by an assistant that accompanied her. The mission is located in the heart of Chinatown on the third floor of a building on Doyer street, near the rooms of the Rescue Band of whom Plainfield has already heard.

The evening opened with devotional exercises led by Rev. J. W. Richardson, after which a view of Chatham Square was shown. Then Miss Potter said that she would take her audience on a tour throug the streets in that vicinity. Then followed views of the streets, shops, houses, and rear tenement yards where the sunshine is never seen, which were all explained. She then told of the people and how they lived, especially the children who often came to the mission to beg for something to eat. The mission, both outside and inside, was next illustrated and the methods of conducting the work described. The Chinese missionary was also shown on the sheet with a picture of his family. Then photographs of the various Christian Chinamen in the mission were reproduced. The deeply interested audience was next told of the Sunday-school and sewing school, in which boys as well as girls learned that useful art. Miss Potter concluded by telling how great the work was and how much more they could do if they had more to do it with.

The lecture room was crowded with a highly interested audience who greatly enjoyed Miss Potter's address. After a collection the meeting was dismissed.

NO DIVISION LINE.

And Borough and Township Politicians Are Hustling to Get One.

A new point has arisen in North Plainfield township that is causing the politicians to put on their thinking caps. As a matter of fact the dividing line between the township and borough has never been established and its necessity was never thought of until the delegates went to the State convention recently and the township was denied a representation. Of course there was much surprise shown, but on second thought they were convinced that the matter should be settled.

The Somerset county convention will be held early next month and unless the line is established the delegates will meet the same obstacle there, and in consequence those interested are doing some tall hustling. Old books are being hunted and F. A. Dunham, who did some surveying years ago, is being sought for the valuable information.

The North Plainfield township committee will meet this evening at Horace Martin's blacksmith shop and will endeavor to get some light on the subject.

W. T. Kirk to Build a Tower.

The fire-alarm tower for which an appropriation was voted a year ago by the residents of Summit, is now to be built. W. T. Kirk & Co., of this city, have been awarded the contract at $600. The tower will be erected in the rear of the town building, and will be 65 feet in height and 20 square feet at base. This will permit the use of a bell weighing 2,000 pounds.

Be Sure and Go.

The Christian Work Society of the Trinity Reformed church have been making great preparations for the production of the "Singin' Skewl" to be presented this evening, and they hope that a large audience will be present to assist them in spending a pleasant evening.

Work Not Yet Accepted.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—I see there is an error in your report about the High School article of yesday. F. C. Lounsbury never wrote me any letter. The Board of Education does not meet to accept any work before October 7th. Respectfully,

It is said that chattel mortgages are held on the stock in H. J. Fleischhauer's drug store, and that A. D. Puffer, manufacturer of soda fountains, is the principal creditor.

A New Park Avenue Store.

MARRIED LAST EVENING.

THE CEREMONY PERFORMED AT THE HOME OF REV. C. R. BARNES.

The Contracting Parties Were Miss Annie Anguerbauer and Willard V. Sutton—Reception Afterwards—Guests.

Miss Anna Anguerbauer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Angerbauer, Sr., of East Third streeet, and Willard V. Sutton, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Sutton, of Liberty street, were united in marriage last evening at 7:15 by Rev. Dr. C. R. Barnes at his home on Grove street.

The bride wore a charming gown of gray faille silk, trimmed with point applique lace. She also wore orange blossoms. The bridesmaid, Miss Josephine Fritz, a cousin of the bride, was gowned in crepe de chene and pink silk, trimmed with point de gene lace. She carried pink roses. The best man was Fred Sutton, a brother of the groom.

After the ceremony they were taken to the bride's home on East Third street, where a few invited guests were present to welcome the bridal party. Mr. and Mrs. Sutton were showered with rice according to the ancient custom and received the hearty congratulations of all present for their future prosperity and happiness. Smashed Both Shafts.

There was quite a lively time on the Springfield road last evening at about nine o'clock, where the road branches off for Grenside Park. A young man from Orange was driving over to see friends in Plainfield when, in some manner, his horse became frightened and jumped backward getting its feet entangled in the cross-bar. The horse was thrown and both shafts were snapped while the dashbard was kicked out of place. Thanks to the kindness of Ed. Schenk, the milkman, the young man was enabled to go on to Plainfield where he spent the night with his friend, Eugene Moore, of East Fifth street.

A Vacation at Somerville.

Miss Anna Jackson and Joseph Craig, colored, were arrested by Marshals Dodd and Wilson on Coddington avenue about ten o'clock last night for acting indecently. They were taken before Justice Crosley this morning. Miss Jackson was given thirty days and Craig ten. The marshals took them to Somerville where they will spend their vacation.

Burglars Make a Rich Haul.

Burglars made a rich haul in Somerville Tuesday night. They entered the residence of Joshua Doherty and secured a gold watch and a large sum of money. Three diamond rings and two pairs of ear-rings and other valuables amounting to about $1,000. They also tried to rob the house of Mr. Cammann, but were frightened away by one of the family who was awake.

WILL FIGHT TAMMANY

Grace-Fairchild Democrats Talking Revenge.

They Will Put Forward a Union Ticket To Oppose the Tigers' Local in New York City—State Democratic Ticket Endorsed—Work of the Convention.

New York, Sept. 26.—The withdrawal of the Grace-Fairchild men from the democratic state convention means a union ticket in this city in opposition to Tammany's local ticket and separate democratic candidates for senate and assembly. This is admitted by several of the Grace leaders. The state democratic ticket, however, will be endorsed.

The Work at Syracuse.

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 26.—Syracuse to-day has resumed her usual quiet. The dying and wounded which strewed yesterday's battlefield have been gathered in by their friends and all the democractic politicians, both big and little, have left for their homes. Syracuse has been the scene of a number of conventions, but that of yesterday was probably the most exciting of any ever before held here. The crush to get into the convention hall was terrific for the reason that it was generally known that the fighting was not over and that there was fun ahead Preliminary to the meeting of the convention the Grace democracy met and resolved not to accept the crumb thrown to them by the committee on credentials in the shape of a one-fifth representation. They were in an angry mood and objected more to the resolution recognizing Tammany as the regular organization than they did to the basis of representation, and although Tammany failed to shut them out from all recoguition, when the foes of the tiger found that the convention would grant them only one-fifth of the New York delegation they left the hall, and Tammany was happy.

Bad Day for Leaders.

Senator Hill failed in his attempt to heal the breach He also failed to keep his slate intact, for the convention showed that it had a mind of its own. Senator Murphy and ex-Lieutenant Governor Sheehan received a set-back from the convention and the wise boss who stayed at home was Richard Croker, for he escaped the fate of the others.

Hill's Excise Plank Beaten.

In platform the convention will go down in history as memorable. Its utterances were bold and clear on subjects which politicians generally fight shy of. The sub-committee on excise reported to the committee on resolutions an excise plank which the committee adopted. Senator Hill's plank was beaten. The word Sunday was left out of the resolution entirely. The country delegates would not have it, and Hill had to yield that much. The plank as adopted is merely a local option resolution favoring the submission to the people of all disputed excise question of Sunday opening. This was regarded as a defeat of Senator Hill in the house of his friends.

Sound Money.

The financial plank, favors sound money; gold and silver the only legal tender; no currency inconvertible with gold; gradual retirement and extinction of the greenback currency; no free and unlimited coinage of silver. The administration of President Cleveland was endorsed and the democratic national platform of 1892 reaffirmed. A star was adopted as the democratic emblem, and resolutions introduced by Mr. Sulzer extending sympathy to the Cuban patriots were adopted with a wild cheer.

Some Bad Blood Caused.

The course of the convention in not acceding to the demands of the state democracy caused some bad blood, and at least one man, Daniel G. Griffin, refused to run in consequence. The dropping of Augustus F. Scheu, Erie county's candidate for comptroller, caused disappointment in the western part of the state. This was shown by the action of the Erie delegation in voting against the Hill man named for engineer. With the aid of some other dissatisfied ones Russell R. Stuart was nominated.

Not a Slate Ticket.

The ticket nominated is probably the only one that has emanated from a democratic state convention during the past twelve years that could not be called a slate. Its complexion was changed from top to bottom several times during the morning, with the exception of General King, as a result of a change in the situation, brought about from different directions but resting principally on Tammany's restless spirit and the state democracy discontent. The last arrangement of the ticket was the result of the declination of Daniel O. Griffin to stand for the attorney generalship should the state democracy decline to accept their one-fifth representation and withdraw from the convention. When this occurred his friends promptly announced his withdrawal and before the friends of the various candidates knew what had happened, Norton Chase had been changed from a candidate for the nomination for comptroller to that for attorney general.

The Ticket.

Here is the ticket named after two days of controversy and strife: For secretary of state, Horatio C. King, of Kings; for state treasurer, De Witt Clinton Dow, of Schoharie; for comptroller, John B. Judson, of Fulton; for attorney-general, Norton Chase of Albany; for associate justice of the court of appeals, John D. Teller, of Cayuga; for state engineer and surveyor, Russell B Stuart, of Onondaga.

GREENHALGE FARIN THE LEAD

Boston, Sept. 26.—Additional returns from republican primaries held last night throughout the state only serve to swell the ranks of Greenhalge supporters, and to show that he will surely be the nominee of the next state convention for governor.

VETERANS FOR CUBA.

Gen. Campos Wants Old Soldiers Instead of Recruits.

Madrid, Sept. 26.—It is announced that in accordance with a request made by Gen. Martinez Campos the reinforcements hereafter sent to Cuba will be composed of old soldiers instead of recruits, as heretofore.

SUNDAY BEER PARADE.

Liberal Law Demonstration in New York—Reviewed by Roosevelt.

New York, Sept. 26.—Fully 10,000 New Yorkers who proclaim themselves lovers of liberty and against the enforcement of the excise laws on Sunday, joined in a parade yesterday afternoon with brass bands and American flags, and the allegorical floats showing Liberty in mourning and a workman in the hands of the police for drinking beer on Sunday, while a millionare tipples at his club. Police Commissioner Roosevelt reviewed the parade. On reaching the end of the line of march, the paraders adjourned to Sulzer's Harlem River park, where they listened to speeches advocating more liberal Sunday laws. The demonstration was under the supervision of the United Societies for Liberal laws. There were 360 societies represented, mostly German organizations. Mr. Roosevelt walked up to the stand unattended. Very few knew of his presence. The stand was crowded with leaders of the liberal Sunday law movement, among them a score or more of brewers. Mr Roosevelt was recognized shortly after his arrival and was introduced to those present. Mr. Roosevelt stood with bared head and reviewed the paraders. He was accorded a hearty reception by the men in line, and was frequently applauded. He laughed heartily at a number of banners in the parade bearing caustic allusions to himself, one banner bearing the inscription, "Rooseveltism is a farce and a humbug."

FRENCH EXPEDITION MAY FAIL

Troops in Madagascar Dying in Large Numbers Daily.

Paris, Sept. 26.—The Figaro publishes a special dispatch from its correspondent in Madagascar which says that an addition of 1,200 African troops to the French forces in Madagascar is probable. Private telegrams from Madagascar asssert that the entire supply of provisions belonging to the French expedition has been spoiled by the high tide at Majunga, which submerged the stores. These dispatches further state that the deaths at Majunga average forty a day. A letter from a correspondent at Vatomandry says that the French expedition is likely to fail, as hundreds of the men are becoming invalided from the effects of the jigger worm. Another obstacle to the success of the expedition is the fact that the railway contractor who undertook to construct a road over the proposed route of the expedition had failed to get his line through the swamps, which are as a rule almost in some cases wholly impenetrable.

SPRUCE IV.'S VICTORY.

The English Yacht Defeats Ethelwynn in the Second Race.

Centre Island, Sept. 26.—For the second time since the trophy known now as America's cup was brought to this country Briton has won a yacht race from an American boat. Spruce IV. yesterday captured the second of the Sewanhaka club's challenge series for small boats, defeating Ethelwynn, the defender, by a narrow margin of 23 seconds in a twelve mile race over the triangular cource of two miles a side. The contest was fought out in a wind of strength varying from nothing up to eight miles an hour, and which shifted to nearly all points of the compass, from south to northwest, while the tiny racers were going twice round a six mile triangle.

THE CONFLICT IN FORMOSA.

Progress of the Japanese Campaign. Reinforcements Needed.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 26.—The Novoe Vremya states that the Japanese captured Chang-Hua and Taiwan-fu, from the Formosan rebels after severe fighting in the latter part of August. The Japanese, at last accounts, were marching on Anping, where the rebels are concentrated. The Japanese army in Formosa, which numbers 60,000 men, will have to be reinforced, as the troops are worn out by the hardships of the campaign. Three thousand, two hundred Japanese soldiers are in hospitals in Formosa.

THE TIME FOR FORCE

Sword Alone Must Now Free Ireland.

Revolution the One Sentiment at the Irish National Convention in Chicago—Constitutional Agitation Declared To Be Useless—Organization of an Army Advocated.

Chicago, Sept. 26.—"Revolution," written in big, flaming letters, was the text of yesterday's proceedings of the Irish National convention, and when the body adjourned last evening to await the report of the committee on resolutions and ways and means there did not remain a lingering doubt in the minds of a single delegate regarding the exact purpose and policy of those whose call had summoned him to Chicago. There was no beating about the bush, no veiling in honeyed phrases of the object of the meeting. It was boldly declared by Irish-Americans from different parts of the country—some of them of national reputation, that, no matter what the sentiments of the American people, or the American government, the time had arrived for the Irish of America to abandon constitutional agitation, to take up the sword, and to seek the independence of their isle by use of weapons rather than through legislative enactments.

Named as Ireland's First President.

The organization of a standing army, ready to do battle whenever the opportunity should present itself was advocated amid frantic enthusiasm and which culminated in a wild scene when a New York delegate named the chairman, ex-congressman John F. Finerty, as the first president of the Irish republic of the near future. Hatred of England and everything English was expressed in vehement language in every speech, and the cheers and yells of approval were mixed with hoots, hisses and groans for the British government, tories and unionists.

Ways and Means.

As to the matter of ways and means it was insisted that the delegates and those behind them had been instrumental in securing the greater portion of the hundreds of thousands of dollars that have been collected and forwarded to the Irish parliamentary party during the past five years and that ten times the total thus collected would be contributed by the Irish race in America upon the pledge that the money be used in preparing for a "fight in the open." Maurice W. Wilhere of Philadelphia and O'Neill Ryan of St. Louis, the recognized Irish-American leaders of their respective states, and O'Donovan Rossa, who was introduced as the "world renowned and unquestionable Irish rebel" and was awarded the ovation of the day, were the principal speakers. When the convention adjourned by limitation of time, two-thirds of the delegates were yelling for the appearance of P. J. Tynan, "No. 1" of the Phoenix park tragedy. They were pacified only with the promise that he would appear this afternoon.

PRINTERS ACQUITTED.

Jury in the Trenton Conspiracy Case Directed To Acquit Two.

Trenton, Sept. 26.—The summing up in the trial of Kuser, Robinson, Krauettler and Heintz for conspiracy to defraud the state in connection with a printing contract was finished at noon yesterday, Counsellor Kalisch making the final argument for Kuser and Prosecutor Stockton closing for the state. The latter insisted that the written agreement between Kuser and Robinson was plain proof of conspiracy. If the money paid by Kuser to Robinson was a mere gift, why did Robinson demand that the promise to pay should be put in black and white. Judge Conover's charge reviewed the salient features of the evidence and defined the law of conspiracy. Before concluding the court directed the jury to acquit Krauettler and Heintz. The jury retired at 12.15 p. m., and in five minutes returned with a verdict of acquittal.

EGG HARBOR'S DANGER

Forest Fires Entered the Town Limits.

Many Persons Overcome by the Intense Heat While Fighting the Flames—Residence and a Barn Burned—Destructive Fires Raging in Quebec—Houses Swept Away.

Egg Harbor, N., J. Sept. 26—Forest fires threatened this city last evening. A change of wind caused the fire to enter the city limits, and a general alarm was sounded. Every man in town strong enough to carry a shovel was out last night fighting the flames, the roar of which can be heard for miles. Many persons were overcome by the intense heat from the fire. The residence of Louis Young and a barn owned by Geo. Lehmar were totally destroyed. Never before has the excitement over forest fires been so intense here. Farmers quit their work in the field to fight the fiery element in order to save their homes. Many houses located in the fire's course are in great danger.

Great Losses in Quebec.

Aston, Que., Sept. 26.—The forest fires which have wrought so much damage in this district are still raging on all sides of this village and it seem almost impossible to check their progress. Nothing short of a heavy down pour of rain will save valuable timber and buildings in this vicinity. At St. Eulalie seven dwellings and fourteen barns stored with the season's crops have been totally destroyed. At St Celestin six houses, together with outbuildings and a large quantity of lumber have been burned to the ground. Similar reports come from St. Sylvestre, Maddington and St. Rosaire.

PEARY'S EXPEDITION PARTY.

Companions in Peril and Privation Returning to Their Homes.

St. Johns, N. F., Sept. 26.—The steamer Silvia, with the members of the Peary expedition on board, sailed at 6 o'clock last evening. Lieut. Peary and Mr. Lee leave her at Halifax. The former will visit his mother in Boston, while Mr. Lee goes to Meriden, Conn., where his family reside. The other members of the expedition are going on direct to New York with all the expedition's equipments and collections, including the meteorites. Lieut. Peary has no plans other than for the immediate future. After visiting relatives, he will proceed to New York to superintend the delivery of the collections to the museum of natural history. Then he expects to be occupied for several weeks in preparing the official records of the expedition and reports for scientific societies. He reports for duty at the navy department at the end of November. He has no idea where he is likely to be assigned.

PASTOR FIGHTS THIEVES.

He Battles Bravely but Is Badly Beaten and Cut.

Southington, Conn., Sept. 26.—The Rev. Thomas C. Hanna, the young pastor of the Second Baptist church, was awakened at 4 a. m. by some one moving around his room. He arose and discovered two men making for the window. He grappled with them and was thrown heavily against a marble stand, but finally downed one of his antagonists. The other came to his pal's assistance with a knife. Mr. Hanna grasped the blade, and, although it cut him badly, succeeded in wresting it from the burglar. Both men pitched on the minister and beat him severely. In the struggle Mr. Hanna dropped the knife. The burglar recovered it and stabbed Mr. Hanna twice, once in the fleshy part of the right arm, inflicting a deep wound, and again in the face near the left eye. The burglars then fled. A general alarm has been sent to neighboring cities. Mr. Hanna's wounds are not necessarily fatal, though disfiguring and very painful.

PETITIONS TO CONGRESS.

Signatures to a Request for Belligerent Recognition for Cubans.

Cincinnati, Sept 26.—All the hotels in this city received through the mail yesterday from an unknown source printed petitions with a request that they be put in a prominent place in the rotunda. The petitions are addressed to congress and read as follows: "We the undersigned petition your honorable body to take such action as shall result in the speedy recognition as belligerents of the Cuban patriots now struggling for freedom." In most of the hotels the petitions were placed on the front counters and as each arriving guest registered he saw the document and affixed his signature. A circular accompanying the petition contained the information that they would be called for.

AN HOUR AFTER THE WEDDING.

Morningstar Killed While His Bride Was Sitting in His Lap.

Huntingdon, Pa., Sept. 26.—Yesterday afternoon Rev. A. R. Lambert went to Juniata township and united Jesse Morningstar and Mary A. Bowser in marriage. About an hour after the ceremony while the bride was sitting on the groom's lap, George B. Spooneybarger, Morningstar's brother-in-law, handed him his gun and the weapon was accidentally discharged. The shot took effect in the upper part of the groom's head, and his brains were scattered all over the bride and the room in which they were sitting. Death was instantaneous.

CRANBERRY CROP RUINED.

Bogs in South and West Jersey Covered with Worthless Berries.

Haddonfield, N. J., Sept. 26.—The cranberry crop in south and west Jersey, which gave promise early this month of being one of the largest ever harvested is virtually ruined, and there will not be a sixth of the anticipated crop. Every agency known to that fruit has attacked it this year, and the bogs are covered with worthless berries.

Arrival of an Overdue Steamer.

Green Bay, Wis., Sept. 26.—The Lackawanna Transportation company's steamer Grand Traverse arrived yesterday, forty-eight hours overdue. The steamer was caught in Sunday night's hurricane and ran back to Garden Island. She had a rough experience, but was not damaged.

NO LICENSE FOR FIGHTS.

Texas Tax Collectors Have No Authority To Issue Them.

Austin, Tex., Sept. 26.—The comptroller has given out for publication correspondence between the tax collectors of McClelland and Hayes counties and his department anent the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight. The tax collectors of these counties wrote to the comptroller respectively, the first to know if he was authorized to issue a license and what his duty was in the premises, and the last applying for three occupation tax receipts for fights between man and man. The comptroller declined to send the occupation tax receipt, after submitting the question to Attorney-General Crane, who responded in part as follows: "Referring to your's of recent date from the tax collector of McClellan county, I beg to say that in my opinion the statute licensing fights between man and man, is not now in force. It was repealed by the act of 1891. My understanding is that when statutes are brought forward in a revision they occupy the same relative position that they did before. You are therefore respectfully advised that, in my opinion, you have no authority to issue any occupation tax receipt licensing a fight between man and man. I think it might well be doubted whether the statute was not always void, in that it was contrary to public policy, if not the constitution itself."

CHALLENGER ROSE.

He Is a Canadian, His Mother Is an American and His Partner Also.

London, Sept. 26.—The United Press has obtained the following authentic information concerning Charles D. Rose, who, through the Royal Victoria Yacht club, of Ryde Isle of Wight, has challenged for the America's cup. Mr. Rose is the second son of the late Sir John Rose, Bart., of Canada. His mother was Miss Emmet-Temple, of Rutland, Vt. It is understood that Mr. Lowe, an American, who has some horses in training in England is associated with Mr. Rose in building the new challenger for the cup, and experts therefore do not regard the enterprise as of purely British origin. Sir John Rose, the father of the challenger for the cup, assumed the management of the financial affairs of the duchy of Cornwall for the Prince of Wales when he settled in England fifteen years ago and is credited with having greatly improved the finances of his royal highness during his administration. Mrs. Frances Sloane Stanley, a daughter of Sir John Rose, was at one time a prominent figure in society at Marlborough house, the London residence of the Prince of Wales.

KILLED FIVE INDIANS.

Ranchmen Have a Battle with Yarquis in Mexico.

Hermosillo, Mexico, Sept. 26.—Information reaches here of a fight between a scouting party of ranchmen and a band of twenty Yaqui Indians in the mountains southeast of here. The Indians had been making attacks upon the ranches of the stockmen and had burned a number of ranch buildings and driven off several hundred head of stock. The ranchmen organized a party went in pursuit and came upon them in the mountains. They fired upon the Indians and the latter stood their ground. The battle was a hand-to-hand conflict, and resulted in the killing of five Indians and the wounding of several others. Three ranchmen were killed and five wounded. Word from Guaymas conveys the intelligence that in the Yaqui River valley, in the southern part of the Mexican state of Sonora, General Tiburico Otero, a retired officer of the Mexican army, was attacked by Yaqui Indians and so severely wounded that his life is despaired of. He was taken to Cretis, and by a special train into the city of Guaymas for treatment.

AFTER 30 YEARS' ABSENCE.

David Hughes Rejoins His Family of Wife, Daughter and Son.

Indiana, Pa., Sept. 26.—Tuesday evening David Hughes, formerly of Butler county, after an unexplained absence of thirty years, rejoined his family of wife, daughter and son, who have resided here about eight years. The reunion was most joyous. Hughes was wounded in the early part of the war, came home and married Miss M. P. Reed, of Pittsburg. In 1864 he returned to the army and in 1865 was honorably discharged. Instead of returning home, Hughes buried himself in the pineries of Wisconsin. His wife mourned him as dead. Hughes had never seen his son, now 30 years of age. Hughes has accumulated considerable wealth and says he is now too happy with his family to discuss the particulars of his long absence and continued silence.

PLEAD GUILTY TO FORGERY.

After making his plea of guilty Steele was remanded to jail, not being able to procure the $20,000 bail required of him, and he will be sentenced next month.

DURRANT'S DEFENSE

His Lawyer's Opening Address Sensational.

Startling Insinuation Made Against Rev. Mr. Gibson—His Letters Compared with Those Sent to the Lamonts—Complete Alibi for Durrant Promised.

San Francisco, Sept. 26.—The court in which Theodore Durrant is on trial for the murder of Blanche Lamont, was a scene of excitement yesterday. The expected opening on behalf of the defense drew to the court a great crowd. After calling a few of the prosecution's witnesses for further cross-examination, Attorney Eugene Duprey, for the defense, began his opening statement. His intimation that the murder was committed, not by Durrant, but by Rev. John George Gibson, pastor of Emanuel church, by a significant allusion to the resemblance of the preacher's handwriting with the lettering on the paper inclosing Blanche Lamont's rings, created a marked sensation.

Pastor's Guilt Hinted At.

"We shall show you that there are marks on the belfry door. We will show you that there was a chisel in a tool box in the pastor's study to correspond with such a chisel as made these marks. We shall show you more. We shall show you those papers with writings on them in the alleged hand of this defendant. We shall show you that these words are in the hand of one man—the Rev. John George Gibson. The prosecution has cast suspicion on one man. There are others open to suspicion.' Another new point dwelt upon by Mr. Deuprey was that a woman would be introduced who would say that she saw Durrant enter the church alone the afternoon of the murder. A complete alibi for Durrant is also promised.

CHARGES OF GRAND LARCENY.

Several Arrested for Stealing Papers Belonging to an Estate.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 26.—Mrs. Jos. R. Rounds of this village and others have been arrested on the charge of grand larceny in the first degree in having stolen papers valued at several thousand dollars belonging to the estate of Royal B. Roundy, who died suddenly, early last May in this village. At the time of his death he boarded with Mrs. Rounds. It was not known that he had any relatives and although a man of some means it was believed that his wealth did not exceed $1,000. George A. Swart of this village was appointed administrator and proceeded to perform his duties as such until a few months ago, when a number of heirs from different states came forward and demanded that the administrator be deposed by reason that his appointment was not regular. Several hearings in the surrogate court was had and from statements made by several witnesses it was believed that a large amount of property had not been accounted for. An order was obtained and a search made of the house where Roundy boarded, when stocks and bonds to the amount of $7,000 was produced by Mrs. Rounds and Mrs. Harriet Berry and turned over to the surrogate. These had been in the possession of the women since Roundy's death. Further investigation showed that more property was unaccounted for, and the surrogate caused the arrest of the two above-named women, Clara A. Weddel and Mrs. Rounds' husband. Chief of Police Blodgett states that Mrs. Rounds made several startling disclosures to him, and one of the Roundy heirs relative to the whereabouts of a large amount of property in securities, etc., but nothing definite has yet been given out. It is believed that the estate will amount to nearly $50,000, if no more, when it is all accounted for.

NEW JERSEY DEMOCRATS.

In State Convention at Trenton Today—A Quiet Gathering.

Trenton, Sept. 26.—The delegates to the democratic state convention to nominate a candidate for governor were astir early this morning, but there is much less excitement and crowding than on the morning of the republican convention, the foreknowledge of McGill's nomination taking the edge off the public interest. The most notable feature of the gathering of politicians is the absence of the old "war horses" of the democracy. Ex-Senator McPherson, Miles Ross and Nelson Paddock are among the missing. Abbett and Bedle have died since the last convention. The notabilities on hand include United States senator James Smith, ex-United States senator Rufus Blodgett, H. Stafford Little, Henry C. Kelsey, Millard Ross, Gov. Werts, Joseph L. Naer and Edward F. C. Young. The last named is manager of the McGill campaign. The ex-chancellor is also here to announce his acceptance of the nomination. Augustus W. Cutles, the granger candidate for the nomination, and Howard Carrow, the Camden possibility, are also present. Ex-Assemblyman Thomas O'Brien, of Morristown, will nominate Cutler. Last night Samuel Kalisch, of Essex, was selected for temporary chairman and Attorney-General Stockton for permanent chairman.

BROKER MANNING EXPELLED.

A Millionaire Dropped by the New York Stock Exchange.

New York, Sept. 26.—The governing committee of the New York Stock exchange at its meeting yesterday expelled John B. Manning for fraud. He had been a member since 1869. He is a millionaire and an extensive dealer in investment securities at No. 18 Wall street. The last previous expulsion from the exchange was thirteen years ago when William J. Hutchinson, who engineered the famous corner in Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad stock, was dropped from membership for fraud. He was reinstated by the courts, but was boycotted by the brokers and soon left Wall street.

There is nothing like having plenty of confidence. Ex-Governor Flower, of New York, predicts that the Democratic ticket nominated yesterday will be elected by 50,000 plurality.

Writing music for high kicks is of rather a lucrative order, if the $10,000 which Sir Arthur Sullivan is to receive for furnishing the music for an English ballet is any criterion.

The Elizabeth Daily Journal says that C. B. Corwin, of this city, J. Martin Roll, of Springfield, John D. Barr, of Elizabeth, and Clarence D. Ward, of Rahway, are probable candidates for the Republican nomination of Assemblymen in Union county this fall. On the Democratic side The Journal says that Judge Green, of Westfield, William Wolfskeil, Wickliffe B. Sayre and Daniel Wolfskeil, all of Elizabeth, are among those mentioned.

Whatever political capital the Republicans may have intended to make out of the trial and expected conviction of Kuser and Robinson on the charge of fraud in the printing contracts, awarded under a Democratic administration, will have a boomerang effect by the acquittal of these men by the jury at Trenton yesterday. This is the second attempt that has been made in court to besmirch the character of men by the evidence of the Corbin investigation, but in both cases it was a failure.

Under the ballot law in New York State, which provides for a party emblem to be printed on the official ballot, the Republicans were to adopt the American eagle as their emblem. The eagle, however, is a portion of the national insigna and a national law prevents its use, so some of the wiseacres say. Up to two years ago the crow would have been the proper thing for the Republicans to have adopted, but just at present they are exempt in New York State from having anything to do with that carnivorous bird.

A few days ago the News took occasion to comment on what it considered to be the ill success of a real estate firm because they refused to advertise in that sheet, and then went on to say that no one could get along in Plainfield unless they advertised with them, which was equivalent to saying that any one who did not advertise with them might expect to get roasted everytime an opportunity afforded. But now it happens that a day or two ago a business man who had advertised exclusively in the News was compelled to close his store and leave town on account of his inability to establish a trade. That incident only proves how inconsistent the News editor is when he publishes such stuff as he printed about the real estate firm, who did, in fact, sell considerable property from their results of advertising in the Daily Press. The Press does not wish to convey the idea that because this merchant, who failed in business, advertised in the News and did not advertise in the Press, was unable to do business, because such argument is absurd. The Press only refers to the matter to show the people of Plainfield to what extremes the News editor goes in order to bring business to himself by making people afraid of the News in the sense that they will try to curry the favor of its editor.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

Is It Not a Case of Guilty Neglect?

A Terrible Responsibility Rests With Somebody.

A Serious Question to a Great Many, and a Sad One.

Who is to blame?

Surely someone is to blame for the enormous amount of sickness and suffering in the world. Too often people are prone to throw the responsibility for their condition upon some higher power. In nine cases out of ten this is wrong, for in most cases the blame lies entirely with the sufferer.

It has been shown by constantly demonstrated fact, proven by the experience of thousands upon thousands of people that most of the difficulties and diseases from which people suffer are easily and readily cured by the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which is, without doubt, the greatest medical discovery of modern times. It is sure to cure disease.

Mrs. Wm. M. Strong, who lives in Waitsfield, Vt., says:

"About ten years ago I had a very severe attack of typhoid fever, which left one side of my body in a very bad condition. One limb swelled badly, and every time I bore my weight on that limb, it seemed as though my hip would unjoint. The pain was dreadful, and I have never been free from that pain during all these years.

MRS. WM. M. STRONG.

"About a year ago the trouble took a different form, going into my arm also. My arm pained me terribly, and when I attempted to lift anything with that hand, my fingers would let go and it would not grip anything. I had no strength in that arm.

"This condition of my arm and limb, both on the same side continued up to about six months ago. My head troubled me very bad. If anything came upon me suddenly; a fearful sensation came over me, starting from the top of my head, and for a short time I was entirely lost as though I was entire gone.

"The same awful feeling would commence if I got very tired, or if many were talking at once. I do not know exactly how to describe my sensation in my head in words, but it was deathly and I suffered very much. Seemed to me as though something gave away in my head and I was gone.

"I certainly felt a good deal alarmed about my condition and I could not have lasted a great while longer if I had not found help.

"I consulted and employed many doctors, who said there was no help for me, as it was the result of the typhoid fever, and did not so much as relieve the pain. My sister informed me of Dr Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and advised me to try it, saying that it had helped her greatly.

"The results are, that after three bottles the pain is all gone from my limbs, and the pain and deathly feeling in my head is relieved. I am able to comfortably do the work in my family for five and six all the time.

"I do most heartily recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to anyone suffering as I was."

If our readers will take example from this case—and such cases are constantly being reported in the newspapers—much of the sickness and suffering which renders life a burden, will be removed. It is a fact that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy does cure.

It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THEATRICAL.

For a long time people wondered how so gifted and versatsle a comedian as Frank Bush did not go into farce-comedy, as dozens of less able vaudeville entertainers had done. The reason was that no manager had offered him monetary inducements that he thought strong enough. Finally Davis and Keogh met this objection. Before putting Mr. Bush at the head of a farce-comedy company they let him test his ability as a regular actor in two very different roles in "On the Bowery."

He won the greatest popular and critical applause. He now comes forth in a new farce comedy entitled "Girl Wanted," written by R. N. Stephens, especially to give his talents a full scope. In this he will soon be seen in this city, assuming the role of a hard-up actor who masquerades as a half-dozen different people—a "jay," a tough boy, a German girl, a Hebrew, an Irishman, and a comic opera prima donna. He also renders unique "specialties." With him are a dozen very clever comedians and soubrettes, all of whom have very amusing parts to play and "specialties" to give. "Girl Wanted" promises to be a treat in farce comedy.

TALK OF INCREASING PEW RENTS.

The Crescent Avenue Church Discusses the Question, But Take No Action.

After the regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting at the Crescent Avenue church last evening, a meeting was held to decide the question of raising the pew rents. Ex-Mayor Charles Place called the meeting to order, after which Henry B. Newhall and W. F. Arnold read their respective reports regarding the change. The meeting was then opened for discussion. After hearing both sides of the question, a motion was made to adjourn until next Wednesday evening at the same time. This motion was unanimously carried.

A Hot Box Starts a Blaze.

A train of coal cars filled with fine coal passed through here last evening about nine o'clock. A hot box on one of the cars set it on fire, and it was sidetracked just beyond the Grant Avenue station. An alarm was sent in from Box 47, and the fire department turned out and soon extinguished the flames. The burned end of the car allowed the coal to fall on the ground below, making a rich harvest for the coal pickers this morning.

Put Up Signs.

The sewer contractors make a mistake in not putting up a sign at the head of a street when closed. He drove through the street almost to Plainfield avenue before he learned he could not get through.

Cut On Cinders.

While practicing football in the yard of Leal's School Tuesday noon, Herbert Moore, of Grove street, badly cut his hand by a fall on the cinder path. Moore started to tackle Willis West, who was running with the ball, but fell and struck his hand on the cinders cutting several gashes in his hand.

CENTRAL PARK IN MIDSUMMER.

Visitors From the Country Numerous There at This Season.

Central Park reflects all the moods of the town. When New York is at the height of its gay season the drives are crowded with handsome private vehicles, the bridle paths are alive with well appointed riders, men and women, and the restaurants are a dazzling show. When midsummer comes the park is given over to boys on vacation and country folk. Whatever great gathering of country folks is in town soon manifests itself in Central Park. The recent German festivities brought crowds of strange Germans to the park, and even the Christian Endeavor delegates, recently in Boston, made excuse to stop in New York on the way to homes in the South and West, and were strongly represented in the Park.

The stranger takes special joy in the menagerie, the Mall, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and that foolish shell of a castle overlooking the reservoirs. One finds them also lost in the Ramble. Lovers take delight in its secluded nooks, and in the long shaded walks from the castle eastward.

The May parties, which mostly occur in June, have now given place to little picnic luncheons. Groups of women and children, both urban and rural, are scattered all over the park at noon, eating light luncheons done up in paper parcels. The restaurants get small revenue from such visitors, though spring and summer are the harvest time of the restaurants.

Well-to-do folks from out of town take luncheon or dinner at these places. One of the restaurants has hit upon a scheme that apparently has a bearing upon the present enforcement of the Sunday laws. There used to be a bar in a quiet rear spot, but now the bar is closed Sundays and week days, and he who would have something strong or something cold must sit down at a table and wait to be served. The head waiter says gravely it is thought an impropriety to sell anything over the bar in the park.

One notes in midsummer that nursemaids with their little charges are fewer in the park, and mothers with little children proportionately more numerous. The change has given the park policemen more leisure for their ordinary duties.

More men than women are riding morning and evening, and the character of the fair bicyclists has changed within the last few weeks. Country visitors stare at the bicycle women because there are still many country places where a woman on a wheel is a novelty. Little country children find the goat carriages of the Mall a great attraction. The conduct of the uneasy country parents doing the park with their little broods is curiously solicitous. The youngsters are pulled and hauled lest they become separated from the parents and so lost.

One could recognize the country visitors if in no other way by the fact that they wear their Sunday clothes. New Yorkers of like means go to the park in negligee shirts and thin coats, but the country folk perspire in starched linen and black worsted, or the usual summer suit of light wool lined. The country visitor seems to know what he ought to see, a thing about which the resident of New York is not greatly concerned. The latter is out to enjoy a shady bench and to feast his eye upon smooth green lawns.

The country visitor regards all this quiet enjoyment as a waste of time. With twelve hours to do the park he must hasten from point to point regardless of heat, weariness and trickling perspiration. The thing is done by dabs, and a half hour is saved if possible for the Museum of Natural History or the Lenox Library. After that, hot, tired and wilted, he boards a Fifth avenue stage and rides to his hotel to make ready for seeing New York by electric light.

Banking in the West.

It was a new bank in a new town in Colorado. As the institution opened for business in the morning a crowd of 200 men gathered, and when the banker asked what was wanted the man who had been appointed spokesman, replied:

"It's jest this, Jim—we can't make out that monthly statement you got out yesterday."

"What's wrong with it?"

"She says deposits amount to $7,000 and cash on hand $9,000.

"Well, that's correct, and I can't see where you have any fault to find," said the President.

"Yes, but the boys don't go much on figgers. Figgers kin be twisted all around, you know. Have you got them 'ere $9,000 handy by?"

"I have."

"Well, won't you jest stand up on a chair and wave the money in the air a few times and let the boys see the color of it? Don't want to put you to any special trouble, you know, but the crowd kinder want to feel sure about it."

The banker got the money from the safe and followed the suggestion and asked if they were satisfied.

"That's all right," replied the spokesman. "We ain't much on figgers, but we know money when we see it. Them deposits is $7,000 and you've got $9,000 to pay 'em. That's chuck up and no discount!"

"Anything else?"

"Jest one little trifle. It's kinder got around town that you are going to Montana to-morrer. Before you start jest count that money into the safe, lock 'er up as tight as a drum and then call in two or three of the boys to watch 'er while you're gone. We ain't showin' any lack of confidence, Jim, but we is givin' you a pinter on how to run a bank in this town without gettin' your neck in a slipknot!"—Detroit Free Press.

Farmer Oatstraw—Yes; I gave him a hammer to mend the barn with, and he threw it so far I hain't been able to find it.—Puck.

STUDY PATRIOTISM.

Some of the Reasons Why Americans Should Be Proud of Their Country.

Mr. George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent of the New York Central Railroad, in an admirable address recently delivered before the Editorial Association of New York State, said:

A subject to which I desire to refer you for a moment, will be found in Ecclesiastes, 7th chapter and 14th verse, "In the day of prosperity be joyful."

Ecclesiastes was a preacher of unusual ability, and some of his epigrams have not been surpassed by any subsequent writer. He dwells at considerable length in various places in his writings upon the duty of enjoying life. He evidently believed in taking advantage of all pleasant surroundings and, from a somewhat careful study of him I have become convinced that, had he lived in this day, and been so blessed as to have his residence in the Empire State, he would unquestionably have availed himself of the facilities afforded by "America's Greatest Railroad," to visit the Adirondack Mountains, the Thousand Islands, Niagara Falls, Richfield Springs and our Peerless Lake George.

Some of you have ideas as to how the passenger business of a railroad should be conducted, and some of you have a habit of stating those ideas occasionally.

May I be permitted to make a few suggestions as to what I think the New York Press Association and every other association of a similar character should do? In my opinion this country needs, more than any other thing, a revival of patriotism, and the newspapers and the public schools should be the great teachers; for it is by them that the greatest influence is wielded. It should be the duty of every American newspaper to teach loyalty to the Government of the United States, as against the encroachments of any foreign power. Every newspaper office and every schoolhouse in the land should have the American flag flying over it, each day of the 365.

What we need, as a nation, is more patriotism, more fidelity to the Government of the United States, more regard for the great bulwark of our liberties—the public sbhools, and more respect for the laws enacted under our National and State Constitutions. Believe in these things yourselves, teach them to your children, and we will have the strongest nation on the earth.

The Florentine Republic, which flourished through more than two hundred years, was, at the beginning of that period, a city of no importance; at its close it was the most prosperous city in the world.

It began to decline from a lack of patriotism; and from the day that it entrusted its public business to inferior men, that day the Republic began to fall, and to-day, Florence is one of a dozen Italian cities, a beautiful place to visit, full of wonderful works of art and memories of her former victories, but with no political influence whatever.

The people recognize the power of the press, the greatest power the world knows. It should be used for the best interests of the whole people and for the honor and welfare of the Nation. If so used no foreign power can ever seriously injure our great Republic, the marvel of the world.

Mr. Mulhall, the British Statistician, in a recent article on the "Wealth of Nations," says:

"If we take a survey of mankind, in ancient or modern times, as regards the physical, mechanical and intellectual force of nations, we find nothing to compare with the United States, in this present year, 1895."

Commenting on Mr. Mulhall's article, Harper's Weekly says:

"The working power of a single person in the United States is twice that of a German or a Frenchman, more than three times that of an Austrian, and five times that of an Italian."

As Mr. Mulhall puts it, an ordinary farm hand in the United States raises as much grain as three farm hands in England, four in France, five in Germany, or six in Austria, which shows what an enormous waste of labor occurs in Europe, because farmers are not possessed of the same mechanical appliances as in the United States.

The actual wealth of the United States is the wonder of every man who investigates the subject, and it may surprise you to learn that the United States today is the richest country in the world, its wealth exceeds that of England by 35 per cent.

Mr. Mulhall says that if the United States had no urban population or industries whatever, the advance of agricultural interests would be enough to claim the admiration of mankind, for it has no parallel in history.

When you consider that the figures here quoted are those of an English statistican, who, if he had any prejudice whatever, would be prejudiced against us, it should make every American citizen, whether he be native born or adopted, proud of his country; and it cannot leave to Socialists, Communists or Populists one iota of a basis for the theories that they are attempting to foist upon the freest and most enlightened people on the globe.

The working power of an individual in the United States has been wonderfully developed during the past 50 years through useful inventions.

Mr. Mulhall is deeply impressed with our educational statistics, and says on this subject:

"It may be fearlessly asserted that in the history of the human race no nation ever before possessed 41,000,000 of instructed citizens."

Harper's Weekly says that the annual school expenditure in this country is $2.40 per inhabitant; Great Britain comes next with an expenditure of only $1.20; France spends 80 cents. Germany 50 cents and Italy 25 cents.

A Severe Test.

It requires considerable genius for a man to relate his woes and keep his friends interested.—Atchison Globe.

"Well, Nellie, I suppose you don't remember much about Tom?" said her companion.

"No: but I remember I liked him," said Nelly; "and Mammy has told me lots of things about him. He used to play robber in the cave, and monkey in the big trees. He knew some way to get up the trees with a rope. I have never been up."

"But you've played in the cave, I suppose?"

"Yes, a little; but I don't like it much, because it's dark, and smells dampy. If I'd had Tom, may be I wouldn't have minded so much."

"Are you afraid of ghosts, Nellie?"

"Not when they really come, as they did last night. I am a little afraid, sometimes, when Mammy tells stories about

"ARE YOU AFRAID OF GHOSTS, NELLIE?"

'em before we go to bed. But really I think ghosts are fairies, don't you?"

"I should think likely. So this is the robber cave? Let's go in. I have wax matches, so it won't be dark.'

The cave, as a mere natural phenomenon, was certainly not very interesting. It was much in need of a boyish imagination to liven it up. It was too low to allow of Mr. Morford's walking upright in it; and the floor was littered with ancient rubbish, and with the decayed remains of a paloeozoic cart. After creeping inwards for ten or twelve paces, they turned a corner, and Nellie showed signs of reluctance. The little wax taper, burning in its socket in the silver match-box, showed what looked like queer, irregular pillars and rafters; they were really straggling roots of the big butternut tree overhead. At the end of the pas- they found some half rotten planks upright like a rude door; Morford pulled at one of them, and it came away, revealing a further, narrow cavity beyond. Nellie shrank back.

"What is there in there?" asked Morford.

"I don't know; it isn't nice; let's go back."

"A potato-cellar, perhaps. Yes, we'll go back. The sunshine is pleasanter, isn't it. Do you suppose Tom ever explored that place when he played robber?"

"He must have been brave if he did! I like to be where it's all alive and bright." sighed with relief when they stood once more in the broad October daylight. They strolled round the corner of the house, and looked up at the mighty, overspreading boughs of the butternut.

"It reminds me of when I used to be a boy," remarked the young man. "I was very fond of nuts in those days. That old tree seems to be full of them; wouldn't it be fun to get up there and pick some! Have you ever been up?"

Nellie shook her had. "There's no rope; besides, I don't climb ropes; I'm a girl."

"But here's a good ladder," rejoined her companion, pointing to one that lay under the end of the house hard by.

"Why, so there is! I never saw it before!"

"The fairies must have brought it especially for us. Let's see if it will do." He lifted, and sat it against the great bole of the tree. It just reached the fork of the lower branches. "It couldn't be better!" exclaimed the young man, enthusiastically. "Now, Miss Nellie, will you walk upstairs?"

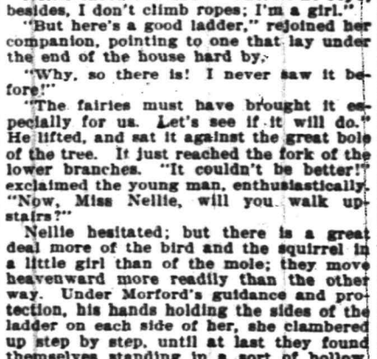
Nellie hesitated; but there is a great deal more of the bird and the squirrel in a little girl than of the mole; they move heavenward more readily than the other way. Under Morford's guidance and protection, his hands holding the sides of the ladder on each side of her, she clambered up step by step, until at last they found themselves standing in a sort of hollow, cup-shaped place, thirty feet above the ground, with the branches stretching out and up in all directions, each as big as an ordinary tree. They overlooked the flattened roof of the old house, and had a fine view all about the surrounding country. The breeze blew sweet and fresh, the sunshine twinkled down between the leaves, and the nuts bobbed against their heads. It was fine! Nellie had never been up in a tree; but now she thought it would be wise to spend most of her time here. It was more exhilarating than any other habitation she knew of.

"This is just like a little room," she said, with a delightful smile at her companion, who smiled back. "And see—here is another almost as big on the other side of the great branch. I'm going to climb over into it."

"Mind you don't fall, then: let me hold your hand."

She scrambled across, and Morford let her carefully down into the broad crotch. After a moment she uttered a shout.

"Oh, see! Here's a great big enormous hole right down into the tree! It's like looking down a chimney: it's all hollow!



"MUST WE GO DOWN SO SOON?" SAID NELLIE.

And here's something sticking in a crack in the side of it. It's an old piece of paper, folded up, with writing on it!"

"Look out you don't tumble down the hole," said Morford, looking over at her. "Take the paper out and hand it up to me; it may be something important. How do you suppose it got there? Perhaps the fairies put it there, or a squirrel, or a magpie, or something."

She gave him the paper, which bore the signs of age, though, considering its position, it was in remarkably good preservation.

tion. He opened it, glanced it over, and then said quietly:

"Yes, Nelie, it is important. I think it will interest Miss Billop very much—and Mr. Corvin too. We will show it to them. Let us get down before he goes away."

"Must we go down so soon?" said Nellie, regretfully.

"Never you mind," replied Morford cheerfully; "we'll come back as often as we like."

CHAPTER V.

Mr. Corvin had been a fortunate man, as the world reckons, and yet he had never looked like a happy one. If he were happy, he was very successful in disguising the ordinary external symptoms of it. To look at him, you would have said that he was a victim of losses, disappointments and discomforts.

He was the richest man in town, and the most powerful: what he said, went, and what he wanted, came. People were in awe of him, and judging by their manner when conversing with him, you would have thought they were devotedly fond of him. But if you had heard them talking about him, when he was not present, you would have reconsidered this conclusion.

One misfortune, to be sure, he had met with it; it concerned his only son, Peter. This young gentleman had been put in the way of getting a liberal education; he had attended the best school and the best college; but owing to personal peculiarities of nature and character, he had not achieved a brilliant or even creditable record at these places. He had learnt how to spend money, though; but some of the things he bought with it had not been of benefit to him either in health or reputation. It was surmised that this had led to disagreement between his father and himself. Peter had not taken the paternal remonstrances in good part. At last things seem to have arrived at a sort of crisis; and after it had passed, Peter was no longer an inmate of his father's house, nor, it was understood, the recipient of an income from him. Nor did Lawyer Corvin encourage any inquiries about his son on the part of inquisitive acquaintances. It was now three years since he had spoke the young man's name, and nobody knew (or cared) what had become of him.

Since Lawyer Corvin had no other living relatives, it was matter of speculation what he would do with his property, when the time came for him to be gathered to his forefathers in the better—or at all events the other—world. It must have been annoying to Mr. Corvin to have spent his life in so arduously scraping wealth together, only to find, at last, that he could do nothing better with it than to bestow it upon some charitable institution. It must be painful for one who carefully abstained from doing any good in the world while he lived in it, to be almost compelled to appear as a benefactor after his decease. Why does not civilization provide openings for posthumous investments more adapted to the temper and predilection of persons of Lawyer Corvin's kind.?

Mr. Morford walked into the sitting-room, holding Nellie by one hand, and in the other the folded paper which they had found in the tree. Mr. Corvin was standing before the table, with his hands behind him, staring gloomily at a pile of gold eagles and dougle-eagles which were heaped up upon it; and Nancy was sitting on the opposite side of the table, with her eyes sparkling and her cheeks red, holding in her hands a slip of paper, freshly written, and bearing the appearance of a receipt—which indeed it was.

"THIS IS NONE OF YOUR AFFAIRS, SIR."

"Good morning, Mr. Corvin," said Morford: "do I intrude, Miss Billop?"

"No, Mr. Morford, that you don't! I was jest settlin' a little account I had with Mr. Corvin. I was tellin' him I was sorry I ain't got no bank-notes, but of he can't carry 't off in his pockets, I'll have a buggy fetched up, and send it down in that!"

"I don't understand this," said Mr. Corvin. "You had no money yesterday, and to-day the house seems full of gold. I shall make investigations. If this money was found anywhere in the land adjoining the house, I shall lodge a claim to it: the land being mine, so is the money."

"Land sakes! That can't be right, can it?" said Nancy, appealing to Morford.

"Mr. Corvin is a lawyer," replied the latter. "He must know about such things. If he owns the land, and you are buying it of him with money you found on the land, he may have the law on you. Of course, if he merely held a mortgage on the property, he has no more right to make such a demand than I have."

"This is none of your affair, sir," said Corvin, harshly.

"It's his affair to answer a question of I ask him, Mr. Corvin," interposed Nancy, whose spirit was evidently rising. "Ef it's your affair to make out that's what mine by right, ain't mine but yours—jest because you're a lawyer and I ain't—then I say it's a poor affair for a man to be in. There's your money, sir, to take or leave; an' I don't want to hurry you, but

" And she looked at him with the resolution that is so effective in good and gentle persons, once they are aroused.

Corvin met the look with a sullen frown, and began putting the gold into the pockets of his various garments; but at this juncture Morford said:

"Hold on a moment, Mr. Corvin: I have something to offer that may save you trouble—in fact, there are two things; for I knew I should be likely to meet you here, so I brought a letter for you from the post-office" and he took from his pocket a sealed envelope addressed to Isaac Corvin, and bearing in the upper left hand corner the printed name of a New York Hospital. Corvin glanced at the superscription, but did not immediately break the seal. "What may your other matter be, Mr. Morford?" he demanded.

"It is this document," said Morford, referring to the folded paper in his hand. "While this little girl and I were rambling about the place just now, she found this, and from the glance I ventured to take at it, I think it contains matter of interest to both you and Miss Billop. Read it, Miss Billop," he added, giving it to her, "and see if I am mistaken."

Nancy took the paper, unfolded it, and began to read it with a strangely startled and perplexed expression.

"You take a remarkable interest in subjects personal to other people. It strikes me, sir," said Corvin, still frowning.

"Well, I like to be of use, when the chance offers," answered the other with a smile. "By the way, Mr. Corvin, you have possession of a great deal of farm-land hereabout, I think: would you be inclined to dispose of it?"

"READ IT, MISS BILLOP."

"No, sir—not a foot of it," said Corvin, curtly.

"I was told that you hold some of it in a rather uncertain tenure," the other continued; "that you are liable to be dispossessed of it, in certain contingencies, in fact. If that is so, it might be worth your while to find a purchaser, even if he were to ask you to make an abatement in the price, in consideration of the risk he would assume."

"You've been misinformed, sir: what's mine is mine, and I don't intend to part with it."

"My information came to me pretty straight," remarked Morford. "I was told you held this land because some paper showing that it really belonged to another had been lost."

"If you choose to go about picking up fools' gossip, it's no affair of mine," retorted Corvin, angrily.

"Perhaps, since you have no son or other legal heir, your idea is to leave this property to the heirs of the person to whom it justly belongs? In this case, I shouldn't press you to sell, though——"

"Will you mind your own business?" shouted the old man, quite losing control of his temper. "Who are you, I'd like to know? You came to me the other day to work off some of your stock on me. I'm glad I put off closing with you till now: I don't believe your stock is worth the paper it's printed on; I believe your invention is a swindle. As to my having no heir to leave my property to, we'll see about that! I'm not dead yet, to begin with, nor like to be; and I've got a son, though your informant seems to have forgotten to tell you so. Folks may think I've cut him off with a dollar; may be I did; but I can take him back again when I choose; and I choose now! I shall write to him by this day's post to come back here at once, and when he comes, I shall settle everything I've got on him. I see your game! You think you can get some pickings by working up some idiotic conspiracy or other with that fool of a woman, to cheat me or frighten me out of my property; but you've got hold of the wrong man. If you don't want to get into trouble, and bad trouble, let me alone!"

"Do you know your son's address, Mr. Corvin?" asked Morford, very quietly. "If not, I have reason to think you may find it in that letter."

"We'll see how much you know," said the lawyer, with a sneer; and he tore open the envelope and ran his eyes over the enclosure. Then his arms fell heavily to his sides, and his face turned dingy white.

"Is he worse?" asked Morford, quickly.

The old man fixed a dull stare upon him. "Who are you?" he demanded after a pause, in a heavy tone. "This letter says my boy, Peter, is dead. But may be it's a part of the swindle——"

But Morford made a gesture with his hand. "No, no, Mr. Corvin," he said, not unkindly. "I knew your son; I met him in New York. He fell ill, and as he was destitute, I had him taken to the hospital from which that letter came, where he could get good nursing. But he was not expected to live. I am sorry for you."

"Keep your sorrow!" said Corvin, setting his jaws: "I can do without it. If the boy's dead, he's dead, and that's the end of him! You and your partner, here, won't get the land any more for that. I'll make a will and leave it to the first beggar I find in the street, sooner than Nancy Billop, or any one she's plotting with, shall have as much of it as would do to bury 'em!"

Morford eyed him rather sternly for a moment, and then turned to Nancy. "What is your news, Miss Billop?" he said.

But Nancy had hidden her face upon her arms on the table, and was crying silently. She did not look up, but pushed the paper towards Morford, with her hand. "Read it to him—poor soul!" she said, with a sob between the words.

Morford took it up, and faced the lawyer again. "This paper, Mr. Corvin," he said, "is in your handwriting, and bears date about ten years back. It is signed by you, in presence of two witnesses. It states that in consideration of the sum of ten thousand dollars to you in hand paid, by Matthew Billop of Fenbrook, you do hereby deed to him, his heirs, and assigns forever, the certain tract and parcel of land herein named and described.—You remember the writing, I presume; at any rate, if you intend to deny it or to contest it, you will be [illegible] I bring it before the court, on Miss Billop's account, as I shall lose no time in doing. Meanwhile, I shall keep it in charge."

The old lawyer was terrible to look at while Morford was speaking thus. His dry lips curled back from his yellow teeth, his fierce, crafty eyes were concentrated in a stare of mingled hate and fear. He leaned forward over the table, and peered into Morford's face.

"Who are you?" he asked, in a husky whisper: "What does all this tomfoolery mean? Who are you?"

"It will soon be known who I am," replied the young man; "I came here to make it known, among other things. But I will tell you now, since you ask me, that I am Tom Linton."

Corvin gave a kind of hoarse cough, and reeled back. His own hands clutched the table cloth as he fell, and dragged it down with him. He fell to the floor with a crash, and the heap of gold coins fell clashing and jingling over him. Some of them rolled away into corners, but the bulk of them lay heavy on his heart, which had ceased to beat.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

An Absolute Cure for the Worst Cases for Rheumatism.

The Plain Language of Mr. Oscar Pike—The Greatest of All Remedies Accomplished His Cure After Many Months of Weakness and Suffering—No Tedious Waiting for Improvement.

And it does not need a tedious trial to prove it.

The effect of this best of remedies is straightway felt.

Not a week goes by before the pains of rheumatism diminish.

Thousands of men and women have told of the days and nights of pain and feebleness exchanged in a few weeks for activity and strength.

Paine's celery compound has won the reputation of being the remedy "that makes people well." Its good works extend from Oregon to Maine. In every State in the Union there has been piled up in the newspapers and medical journals, a tremendous amount of indisputable evidence of the curative power of Paine's celery compound over all forms of nervous debility and diseases of the blood. It cures after nature's plan, by affording nutrition for every part of the body, overhauling the worn-out tissues, and supplying new brain and nerve material, sending pure blood through the veins, invigorating the whole system, and removing the cause of disease.

Mr. Oscar Pike, a well known resident of Princeton, Maine, recently sent the following unsolicited letter to the proprietors of this wonderful remedy:

"Two years ago I was taken sick with what doctors called the grip. I was improving when I took a violent cold and chill. Then rheumatism set in, first in the joints of my shoulders, then down my hands and arms, then all over. Feet, hands and legs swelled. I could not put my hand to my head; could not throw the clothes off from me; could not dress or undress myself, nor get out of my chair without help. For a year and a half I tried all kinds of medicines and sarsaparillas, with little or no relief. I was 73 years old. Some one told me to try Pain's celery compound. After I had taken three bottles I found a marked improvement. I have now taken twelve bottles, and the result is I eat and sleep well, do my own work, and go about as usual, getting in and out of my carriage without help. I have been tempted to put an article in the local paper for the benefit of those that are afflicted as I have been."

Mr. Pike is well known in this locality. He is the founder and president of the North Washington Agricultural Society and Trotting Association. When he goes for his mail, he says, people ask him what he has been doing that he is improving so of late, and he answers as do thousands of others throughout the country—

"Paine's celery compound has made me well!"

TOLD BY GENERAL JOE JOHNSTON.

The Loving Young Couple and the Philosophic Soldier.

Perhaps the most touching incident arising in connection with the war that I now recall, came to my notice on a railway train which also bore as a passenger the very pretty young wife of a young soldier, who, by daring bravery, had secured promotion from the ranks to a Confederate captaincy. The wife was a Pennsylvania girl whom he had met while visiting in the North, and whom he had married and taken to his Southern home just before the war. He was one of the first to enlist in the Confederate army. To devote himself more completely to the cause, he sent his wife, at the first boom of the guns at Fort Sumter, back to her parents in Pennsylvania to remain till the great struggle was ended.

Now, in 1866, five years after their separation, she was on her way South to rejoin her husband and place in his arms their four-year-old daughter, whom he had never seen. It was not long before all the passengers on our car knew the romantic story of the pretty little woman and her beautiful child, and there was not a man among us who did not feel a tenderness for and a protecting interest in both. There never was a woman whose heart was more full of love and joy. She could do nothing but talk of the captain, and wonder if he had changed so that she could not recognize him, or if he wouldn't be able to recognize her. Then she would fall to wondering if he would know his little daughter if he met her in the street by her resemblance to himself, which, as he had never set eyes on her, did not seem probable.

Throughout that long day's ride we all entered most heartily into that dear little woman's hopes, fears, doubts and joys, and shared them to such an extent that we were quite as anxious to see the captain as she was.

We reached our journey's end, and before the train had fairly stopped a tall, elegantly proportioned fellow of 27 came bounding into the car. The little woman gave such a scream of joy as I never can forget, and in less time than I can tell it, was standing in the car aisle, clasped in the young soldier's manly arms, and tears of joy unutterable coursed down two beautiful young faces as their lips met. For my own part, my eyes were so full of blinding moisture that I could see nothing when the proud and happy young wife and mother led her husband for the first time to the place where the little child lay sleeping.

THREW ONE OF THE LADS OUT.

A Hackman's Horse Tries to Run Away on Liberty Street.

There was quite a little excitement on Liberty street yesterday afternoon at about half-past three o'clock when a horse attached to a hack began to dance around in a lively manner on the sidewalk in front of Peeble's grocery at the corner of West Fourth street. The horse had been left by its owner standing in front of Westphal's grocery on the opposite corner while the hackman went down the street on an errand. Two little boys were left in charge, but when the horse became restless they could not hold him and he started across the street and up onto the sidewalk. One of the little lads was thrown out and just when a runaway appeared imminent the young man who is employed by Dr. Simpson to look after his place, stepped forward, stopped the horse and prevented any further trouble.

Every Joint in His Body Racked By Rheumatism.

Could Not Move His Arm and Was in Constant Pain—A True Story of a Remarkable Cure.

William F. Maier, No. 18 Park place Zanesville, O., writes: "About a year ago I had to quit work on account of rheumatism. I had the disease in my hips, back and arms—in fact, in every joint in my body. The pain was intense, and I suffered the most excruciating agony. My doctor could not do anything for me, and I tried every remedy that could be suggested; none of them did me any good, and finally my joints became stiffened and sore. At times I could not move my right arm and was in constant pain. I procured a bottle of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure and within a short time was completely cured. I am free from stiffness and pain, and can cheerfully recommend Munyon's Remedy as the best I have exer known."

M'GILL IS THE NOMINEE.

HE WILL STAND FOR THE DEMOCRATS IN THIS CAMPAIGN.

A Few Scattering Votes for Cutler—Laughable Incident in the Union County Delegation—State Committee Change.

The Democratic State Convention at Trenton yesterday nominated Chancellor Alexander L. McGill, of Jersey City, for Governor. There was but one ballot, and ex-Congressman Augustus W. Cutler, of Morristown, was the only other candidate named in the convention. Chancellor McGill received 796 of the 939 votes in the convention, but before the result could be made known the Cutler votes changed and it was announced that the Chancellor had received every vote and had been nominated unanimously.

Essex county cast 46 votes for Cutler; Hunterdon, 17; Morris, 31; Sussex, 20; Union, 1; and Warren, 28. Morris was the first to change.

In the caucus of the Union county delegation in the morning it was shown that out of the 47 delegates, McGill would receive 41 and Cutler 6, but when the delegation had come together in convention all of the delegates agreed to support McGill with the exception of A. B. Cook, of Rahway, who still held out for Cutler. This was the cause of making a most ludicrous scene among the Union county delegates which set the whole convention in an uproar of laughter. Union was among the last counties that would be called for on the voting, and after Chairman Martine, of this city, saw how the voting was all going for McGill, he turned to the rest of the Union county delegates and said:

"Why not make our vote unanimous for McGill. There is no use of going in with a divided delegation. What say you?"

Some one of the delegates said:

"All right, let her go that way."

So when Union county was called Mr. Martine announced that the entire vote of the delegation was cast for McGill, but he had no sooner got the words out of his mouth than Cutler's friend Cook raised his voice in a mighty tone, protesting that he wanted to cast his vote for Cutler. This was the occasion for a great hubbub among among the Union county delegates which finally spread all over the convention hall. After the excitement had quieted down somewhat, Mr. Cook consented to change his vote to McGill, and in a somewhat dramatic speech Mr. Martine announced the change.

The convention voted to change the method of selecting members of the State executive committee. Heretofore each of the Congress districts has selected two members. Under the new method each county is to elect a committeeman and the chairman of the convention is to appoint five at large. All are to serve for three years. The proposition was made by William B. Gourley, of Passaic county.

The new members from the counties were announced in the convention as follows: Atlantic county, Richard J. Byrne; Bergen, Abram DeRonde; Burlington, Echard and Budd; Camden, Henry B. Paul; Cape May, Alvin P. Hildreth; Cumberland, Phillip P. Baker, Essex, Howard W. Hays; Gloucester, Bowman S. Cox; Hudson, Edward F. C. Young; Hunterdon, Paul A. Queen; Mercer, Samuel Walker, Jr.; Middlesex, Oliver Kiely; Monmouth, David T. Crater; Morris, Thomas H. Hoagland; Ocean, Ephriam P. Emson; Passaic, Louis S. Braun; Salem, Robert Gwynne; Somerset, Frederick P. Olcott; Sussex, Samuel Fowler; Union, S. M. Williams; Warren, Johnston Cornish. The members at large will be announced after a consultation with Chancellor McGill.

Allan L. McDermott, the present Chairman of the State Committee, in announcing the temporary officers, said he would retire from the committee after ten years' service. Recently he had been reviled by the Republicans because he had acted as counsel for the defence in the race track cases, but he had been rehabilitated by their selection of his associate in those cases as the Republican candidate for Governor.

The convention extended a rising vote of thanks to Chairman McDermott for his untiring devotion to the party.

The platform denounces as false the charges of the Republican platform that the Democrats have conducted the State Government dishonestly or extravagantly, and says that the Senate investigating committee, after scrutinizing every expenditure, reported only that in the purchase of supplies two or three employes had been guilty of extravagance or malfeasance. Every good citizen joined in condemning these wrongs, but the misdoings of a few individuals were not chargeable upon the party. Millions of dollars had been spent in public improvements during the last twelve years, without a levy of a dollar of State tax upon property of private owners, which was a sufficient answer to the charge of extravagance.

On the race-track question the platform says:

We favor the adoption of a constitutional amendment that will render impossible any law for the legalization of gambling in any form.

We charge that the course of the Republican party in this and other States, in dealing with the question of legalization of betting upon horse races, has been characterized by trickery and deceit. As evidence of this, we call attention to the course of the Republican Legislature of New York, whose action in attempting to override the recently adopted Constitution of the State and permit gambling on horse races was this year approved by a Republican Governor, and to the further fact that every bet made upon a horse race within New Jersey during the past fourteen years has been made under the protection of chapter 147, Laws of 1880, enacted by a Republican Senate and House.

On the water question the convention made these explicit declarations:

The imminence of danger is shown by the fact that the management of the Republican party of this State is today committed to the hands of those whose fortunes are invested in the water which they hope to sell to our municipalities at a profit of unlimited millions. The credit of controlling and directing the Republican Gubernatorial convention has been properly given to a gentleman who is the leading spirit of the water companies of New Jersey, and the nominee of that convention last winter appeared before the Legislature as counsel for the "water syndicate," and successfully opposed all legislation providing for the relief of the people from the grasp of his clients.

The platform's final declaration of principle is:

We charge the Republican Legislature of 1895 with attempting to drag the judiciary of New Jersey into the field of politics, and we congratulate the people of the State upon the decision of the Supreme Court, which has foiled the attempt to turn our county courts into political machines.

MISS BULKLEY SPEAKS.

She Addresses the High School Students This Morning.

The mere mention of the fact that Miss Julia E. Bulkley, would speak at the High School this morning, brought a throng of graduates and old friends to the morning exercises in Assembly Hall. After a few words of pleasure at being able to see the High School again, Miss Bulkley told something of the methods of study in Switzerland and Germany. She recalled some of the strange sights that she had seen on her visit to foreign lands and dwelt on the great difference between American and European schools. She closed with the advice to the pupils that they take advantage of the many helps and aids which they had at their command. An impromptu reception was given Miss Bulkley, for her friends crowded about her and grasped the hand once more of their old friend and principal before her return to her duties in the Chicago University. Miss Bulkley had to hurry off, however, to take her train and the welcoming friends bid her good-bye.

IN ONE DISTRICT.

Township Committee Meet and Transact Important Business.

The North Plainfield Township Committee, consisting of Chairman Frank Mobus, Clerk H. J. Martin, Elias Allen and R. M. Fountain, met at H. J. Martin's blacksmith shop on Somerset street last evening, principally for the object of establishing the dividing line between the borough and township, as exclusively stated in The Daily Press of yesterday.

Clerk Martin stated that after a careful search among the books belonging to the township he discovered the dividing line which was established in 1872 and runs from Sebring's Mills to Scotch Plains, touching New Providence at one point.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Fountain that the whole of the township be established as one election district. It was carried.

There being no further business to come before the committee the meeting adjourned.

—G. W. Stevens, whose singing was so much enjoyed a few weeks ago at the Y. M. C. A. men's meeting, will sing again on Sunday at the meeting for men at 4:15 p. m. at the Y.M.C.A. Hall. Mr. Stevens leaves town Monday for an absence of several weeks, to fill engagements as a vocalist.

John G. Mauger Editor of the Sunbeam, Seligman, Mo., who named Grover Cleveland for the Presidency in November 1882, while he was Mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says: "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as staple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

ALL CHEWED GUM AND SANG

LUDICROUS ENTERTAINMENT IN TRINITY CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

Quaint Costumes and Surroundings Make a Funny Scene That Is Made Still Funnier by Funny Actors—All Laughed.

"Put your chewing gum under your chairs and get ready," were the instructions given by Prof. Nehemiah to his singin' skewl at the Trinity Reformed church last evening, and his remarks were followed by a general scurry and giggle from the very old-fashioned and grotesque gathering that faced him.

The lecture room in the basement of the church began to fill as the hour of the entertainment approached and the little basket, in which Mrs. F. A. Church received the admissions, grew heavy with its valuable load. The room itself was prettily draped with pink and green bunting, while hung around the stage, at one end, were strings of cucumbers, apples, corn, and other farm products. At last, when all the seats were filled and the usual row of young men was standing up in the rear of the room, Prof. Nehemiah, represented by L. S. Bond, and his school entered. The chorus which formed the school consisted of Phebe, Bert Demarest; Betsey Bobbitt, Mrs. J. C. Van Dyke; Jane, Mrs. E. E. Anthony; Beckey, Miss L. Dunn; Polly, Miss E. C. Benedict; Peggy, Mrs. F. S. Cutter; Nancy, Miss E. Gillem; Eliza, Mrs. John MacMurray; Prudence, Miss Etta Krymer; Patience, Miss MacMurray; Hulda, Miss G. Berg; Susanna, Miss M. Williams; Hetty, Mrs. F. C. Adams; Desire, Miss Fenner; Consider, Mrs. J. E. Moore; Jerusha, Miss Minnie Berg; Rachel, Miss M. Van Fleet; Cynthia, Mrs. H. W. Marshall; Reuben, Edward E. Anthony; Jabez, Will Crawford; Ebenezer, F. A. Church; Jeremiah, F. S. Cutter; Jakie, T. E. Hazell; Hezekiah, Robert Clark; Jedediah, Will Holmes; Azariah, Elmer Runyon.

When the professor had instructed his scholars as to the placing of their gum, he called the roll and found a number absent. Jabez, Will Crawford, was the first of the missing ones to appear and, when told he was late, consulted a large alarm clock that he carried in his shirt. With thoughts entirely on the apple he was eating, E. E. Anthony, as Reuben, entered. "I tore my pants," he explained, and showed an immense white patch on the seat of his trousers. His teacher took away the apple and sent him whimpering to his seat. Betsey Bobbitt was the next to arrive and gave a written excuse to her teacher. Will Holmes, representing Jedediah, came late and gave as his reason for doing so that "Mamma tied me up in a knot and I fell in Tier's pond," and poor Jedediah did not appear to straighten himself out during the rest of the evening, but kept the audience convulsed with laughter at his very comical antics.

The scholars were then told by their teacher that visitors would arrive, and soon in walked Obidiah, P. M. Demarest; Jemima, Mrs. P. M. Demarest; Samantha, Miss Lillian A. Force; and Tursha Ann, Miss Lydia W. Dufford. They were welcomed by loud smiles and grimaces from the singers. Samantha was next escorted to the piano. Then their leader asked them all to strike a chord. The noise that resulted was frightful, and another attempt was just as bad. The third was all right, however, and the regular programme opened with a solo by Miss Krymer, "Aunt Dinah's Quilting Party," in which all joined in the chorus. After a general misbehavior on the part of all the school, Miss Dufford played a piano selection in a most enjoyable manner.

"Can't I set by Susanna?" shrieked out Reuben, while Ebenezer bowed deeply to the audience as they loudly applauded Miss Dufford. After a well rendered vocal solo, "I Loved You Better Than You Know" by Robert Clark, Cynthia broke out with "Make him stop pullin' my hair." "He's throwing his peanut shells in my yard" was heard from Jedediah and the next instant his smothered yells could be heard from under a capacious sun bonnet which was sent flying over his head. He was released only in time to jump up on a chair and join in the general turmoil caused by the appearance of a little candy mouse. There was great excitement for a few minutes and Ebenezer made his feet fly about to the terror of his class mates. At last, however, Reuben the brave man, marched up and stepped on it. The whole chorus then united in singing "The Old Oaken Bucket" while Jedediah flourished his arms about in the most improved fashion. Mary Ann here began to cut up and was set between two of the boys. While Jedediah was examining the the sign from off his back which read "From Morris Plains," someone scattered some snuff about and all indulged in a general sneeze.

"Patience" said the professor, "is a virtue" shouted out the irrepressible Jedediah and was silenced with a look. The alarm of Jabez's clock went off at this point and Jed came out with the remark, "Let's play Liberty Bell March." The effort was too great however and Jed went over in a heap, to receive a good thrashing from his teacher.

Miss MacMurray, and Miss Krymer sang vocal selections and then Jed got off a very amusing ditty, which was so pleasing that an encore was demanded, but not responded to, as encores were ruled out from the start, on account of the length of programme.

"The Swanee River" by the entire school followed, and then Azariah, Elmer Runyon, was introduced and sang "The Sweetest Story Ever Told" while Phebe took it all to herself. After a duet by Becky and Jed, the entertainment closed with "Auld Lang Syne."

After the programme was concluded, the audience was invited to remain and partake of the refreshments which were soon passed around by the men. The entire affair was arranged by the Ladies Christian Work society of the church, to pay for the renovating and painting of the lecture room.

About $80 was received, and the rest of the necessary funds will be raised at other entertainments during the winter. The commttee in charge consisted of Mrs. P. M. Demarest and Mrs. J. F. MacDonald, who were assisted by Mrs. F. A. Church and Mrs. R. A. Meeker.

Some of the costumes of the singers were very remarkable. Bert Demarest, as Phebe, wore, besides a very strange costume, a night-cap that was his mother's wedding night-cap. P. M. Demarest had, as part of his make-up, a white vest over forty-eight years old, worn by him at his wedding.

F. A. Church, was a great success, attired as an English school boy, with a genuine white Irish spun linen blouse, over 100 years old.

The evening was greatly enjoyed by all present, and there was a unanimous opinion that "The Singin' Skewl" was a decided success, and should be repeated.

MANHATTAN CYCLERS TO RACE.

New York Wheelmen Will Hold Their Annual Event in This City.

The Manhattan Bicycle Club of New York, one of the largest and most influential clubs in the Metropolitan district, will hold their annual club races on the Crescent Oval in this city tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, with the following interesting list of events:

One-mile handicap for members who have never won; one-mile handicap, open to all members; two-mile handicap, open to all members; five-mile handicap, open to all members; one-half-mile scratch, open to all members.

As the events among the members of the Manhattan Bicycle Club have grown to be one of the principal annual features of the club, the races on the Crescent Oval tomorrow afternoon should prove one of the most interesting afternoon's sport ever witnessed on the oval, and as it is purely a club affair for the annual club trophies there will be no admission charged to either the grounds or grand-stand, and as everything is free there will no doubt be a large attendance to witness the New York boys struggle for club honors and supremacy.

One Before the Judge.

There was only one culprit for Judge Coddington to deal out justice to this morning, and he had only been drinking too hard. He was a colored man named Sheridan Jones, and paid his fine of $5 in preference to visiting Sheriff Kyte for twenty days.

Nearing the End.

Ninety-five has been a great year for peaches and there are some left yet. Neuman Brothers will have 175 baskets of the best of them tomorrow ranging in price from 50 cents to $1 a basket.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmrcy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

NO REFORM IN THE DALTON'S

INTERESTING COLLOQUY BETWEEN AN OUTLAW AND A MISSIONARY.

Miss Moffett Tells of Her Work in the Slums and Out in the Wild West—A Large Number Instructively Entertained

A charming reception and tea was given yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. C. L. Goodrich, of West Seventh street, to the ladies of the Congregational church, to meet Miss Moffett, a home missionary, who returns to her work in Oklahoma next month, who was introduced, after which she gave an informal talk about her work.

She was the first woman in New York to do rescue work in the slums at night. In this work she was very successful. Her pathetic stories of the unfortunate women and girls whom she had been privileged to help, brought tears to the eyes of many of her hearers.

Her work next led her into the country towns of Vermont, where the American Board send missionaries two by two to help over-burdened pastors in their work in the suburban districts, where the inhabitants often live almost like heathen, seldom or never attending church, and doing their work on Sunday, as on any other day. This state of things, said Miss Moffett, is not in Vermont alone, it is in New Jersey, New York and all over the country. In one district, where the people threatened to "run the missionaries out of town," after a two weeks stay, Miss Moffett and her companion left a very different state of affairs; a Christian Endeavor Society had been organized, at least one in every family had come out on the side of Christ, and the worst man in the place, a man with the reputation of being the most profane in the county, had become an earnest Christian.

Lately, Miss Moffett's work has been in Oklahoma. In this city, young in years, but old in wickedness, she has had some strange experiences. On her arrival in the place, the train she was on on was "held up" by banditis of the "Dalton gang." The only woman in the sleeper, she hurridly put her money in her shoe, and determined not to give it up without an effort. But when the depredators reached her berth, they informed her that "they never molested ladies," and passed on.

One day, while walking with a friend, her companion remarked:

"There comes one who is probably the wickedist man you ever saw, one of the Daltons, a leader of the banditis."

Miss Moffett looked carefully at the man, resolved that she would know him again, if she ever came in contact with him.

Driving alone one day, several miles from town, she met a solitary horseman, and recognized him as the formidable Dalton.

She remembered that he "never molested ladies," and instantly her resolution was taken. She stopped her carriage and said:

"Good morning, Mr. Dalton!"

He halted instantly, and gazed at her in astonishment.

"I'm afraid I do not know you, he said.

She told him who she was, and he looked surprised.

"Why, you don't look a bit like a missionary!" he exclaimed.

"Missionaries wear black gowns and black bonnets."

"The missionaries up our way have taken up some new ideas."

Miss Moffett replied: "We wish to look as nicely as we can for our Saviour."

"Are you going to preach to me?" he demanded.

"No, I am not going to preach to you, but I want to ask you one thing. Mr. Dalton, don't you ever get tired of the life you are leading? Wouldn't you like to reform, if you had a good opportunity?"

"Well," said he, "reform isn't much in my line, or in my family's line. We ain't made of that kind of stuff."

"We have two of your brothers up here in the penitentiary," said Miss Moffett.

"And I suppose you think I ought to be there too," he said quickly.

"What do you think about it, Mr. Dalton?" asked the missionary.

"Well, I suppose if I had my just deserts, I'd be behind some prison bars, sure enough," he admitted.

"But I'll show you what my family thinks about reforming.

"One of my brothers determined to leave this wild life, and wrote to our mother that if she would send him the money, he would reform, and settle down to an honest life."

"Of course she sent him the money?"

"She just didn't then! She wrote back that she would see him in hell first, that reform didn't run in the Dalton family. So you see what sort of stuff I am made of."

The missionary looked full in his face with her earnest eyes, and said: "Mr. Dalton, I am very sorry for you and I shall pray for you every day."

"Well," said he, "I like your spunk. Shake hands, will you? And now remember that I am your friend. It isn't a small matter to have a Dalton for your friend, or your enemy: if a Dalton says he will kill you, you are as good as a dead woman, whether it is now or ten years from now, and your friend once, he is your friend forever."

Who can tell what may be the result of that encounter? He will not forget that a pure woman said she was sorry for him, and would pray for him every day.

Miss Moffett also told of the work for the cow-boys, and among the loney women in the thinly-settled regions of the west.

The audience, which filled the drawing room and extended out into the halls, listened in absorbed interest to the speaker, and at the close gathered around her, eager to grasp the hand of the earnest young worker for the Master

In the dining room dainty refreshments were served. Miss Ellis presided at the tea table, while Miss Kirkner dispensed lemonade.

WELCOMED THEMSELVES.

But Another Union Will be the Outcome of the Convention.

The Union County W. C. T. U. convention held yesterday in the Baptist church at Roselle, was thoroughly interesting and productive of much good. At present there is no Union in that place, and it was with the intention, if possible, of organizing one that the convention was held there. The president, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, of Plainfield, presided and after the meeting was opened with devotional exercises made an address in which she said that the Union was obliged to welcome itself, but everything went to show that the members were welcome by the choice decoration of flowers and preparation made for their reception. The sessions were occupied with the reading of papers and reports and a Bible reading by Mrs. J. T. Ellis, of Newark. Her text was taken from Psalms 104, "Finally my sisters be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might."

The present county officers were reelected as follows: President, Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson, of Plainfield; corresponding-secretary, Mrs. S. R. Brom, of Plainfield; recording-secretary, Mrs. Irving, of Westfield; treasurer, Mrs. T. C. Bodine, of Dunellen.

ANOTHER SHORT DELAY.

Street Railway Ordinance Will Be Amended Again.

Upon a close examination of the street railway ordinance it has been deemed best by the City Council to amend the same, which will be done at the meeting next Monday evening. As the ordinance now reads it does not compel the company to lay the tracks in the city before the through line is build, and in order to cover this point an amendment will be made. This will necessitate the ordinance being re-advertised and in consequence the work of building the lines will be delayed about a month.

A Crack Shooter.

The Rochester Post Express yesterday afternoon published a picture of Charles Smith, of this city, and had the following to say concerning him:

Charles Smith, of Plainfield, N. J., who is better known to the shooting fraternity from Maine to SanFrancisco as "Dutchy," is always to be found at the tournaments. He is the crack shot of the Climax Gun Club, of Fanwood, N. J., and has never failed to secure his share of the prize money. He is a steady, reliable marksman and is well up among the average shooters at this tournament.

At Rochester in two days Mr. Smith broke all but fifteen out of 390 targets.

AN AWFUL DISASTER

Details of the Sinking of the Barcaiztegui.

Many Heroic Acts of Self-Sacrifice. The Unfortunates Dumped into Water Swarming with Sharks. Some Pulled Under by the Man-Eaters—Scenes Simply Terrible.

Havana, Sept. 21, via Key West, Fla., Sept. 27.—The following are the particulars of the accident off El Morro, Cuba, when the Spanish war vessel Sanchez Barcaiztegui sank: The Sanchez Barzaiztegui left the bay of Havana with Admiral Manuel Delgado y Parejo and his staff. He was about to make a circular cruise around the island. She cleared from her moorings at 11.30 on Wednesday night, steering for the narrow channel leading to the open sea. She was under easy steam or half speed when the lookout noticed a red and white light on the signal station at the entrance to the harbor, indicating that a steamer was standing in for the entrance of El canal or channel. She was steaming in from the northeast end of the island. She was only two cable lengths away (600 feet). Instantly Captain Ibanez of the Sanchez Barcaiztegui ordered the helm to starboard, thus steering in to his right and close in on El Morro, leaving ample room for the incoming steamer to pass on his port side.

Misinterpreted the Signals.

He duly announced his course by a single blast of the whistle, that being the signal under the international code. Both ships were rapidly nearing each other bow to bow. Captain Ibanez's signal failing to elicit an instant reply he repeated the single blast, but as less than the usual time interval elapsed between the two, the incoming steamer, the Mortera, interpreted it as one signal of two blasts, indicating the port helm. She answered by two whistles and changed her course. This made the collision inevitable. They kept bow on to each other. Captain Ibanez realizing the great and instant peril gave the order for full speed astern, and ordered his wheel hard over to meet the new and unexpected condition of things. This necessitated thirty-four turns of the wheel and involved a loss of very valuable time.

In Total Darkness.

During this critical moment, when the fate of the ship was in the balance, a fireman stumbled against the electric wires supplying light and displaced them, and in an instant total darkness enveloped the ship. The side lights on the bridge and forward, the usual red and green lights, were supplied by the electric current. Momentarily the Mortera lost sight of her in the darkness. Under such circumstances the ship was doomed. In vain did the captain of the Mortera order his ship full speed astern. As stated, momentarily the Sanchez Barcaiztegui seemed to disappear. Ere he could stop his headway the two iron steamers came together with a dreadful blow and crash. It was five minutes past 12 when they struck.

Cool in the Face of Death.

Even in the face of instant death full and perfect discipline was maintained on board the Sanchez Barcaiztegui. With the stoical heroism of the Spanish sailor Capt. Ibanez gave orders to clear away and lower the boats. The admiral, advanced in years and in poor health, quiet and self-possessed, stood near.

Heroic Acts of Self-Denial.

The steamer was sinking rapidly and all the boats were soon floated. Then followed a remarkable scene—the rough-and-ready sailors entered on a contest of generosity and self-denial. "I will wait for the last boat; I have no one to mourn for me," said one. Another cry was heard: "You that have wives and children get into the boats." The brave fellows refused to be first. The same spirit actuated all on board—officers and men alike. They were cool and self-possessed.

The Aged Admiral's Heroism.

The captain and officers surrounded the venerable admiral on the bridge. The latter insisted on being the last to leave the ship. "Admiral," said Lieut. Garcia, "if your excellency wishes, you can be lowered to a boat;" which he declined, saying: "Thanks, my son, although aged I can help myself." Then the admiral addressed the crew. "Haste men, let all save themselves." The ship was sinking under them into the deep waters off the Morro. Almost by force the admiral was placed in a boat, that of Lieut. Garcia Junco. Still many remained on board, when a general cry went up that the ship was sinking.

Scenes Simply Awful.

The third boat containing the admiral was alongside, when an effort was made to clear her. When but a few yard away the gallant ship gave a final lurch and disappeared amid a sea of creamy foam. The suction caused by the sinking of so large a ship drew in everything near by, including the boat containing the admiral, who, with all the crew, were lost. Scenes at such moments are simply indescribable. The surface of the water was studded with heads struggling in the waves sweeping in from the Atlantic. The air was filled with shrieks, prayers and cries—fearful heartrending cries—some shouting farewell to mothers, wives and children. This solemn and dreadful scene was made simply awful by the appearance of many sharks.

Drawn Under by Sharks.

The harbor and coast of Havana is known for its man-eating sharks. Some of the unfortunate men were seized by the legs and drawn under, others sank beneath the waves. While this fearful scene was being enacted the brave and gallant captain of the Mortera, Jose D. Vinolas, had lowered all of his boats, and forty-five officers and men were rescued that but for his assistance would have been drowned within a hundred yards of a large and populous city. All were loud in their praise of Captain Jose D. Vinolas.

Last To Leave the Cruiser.

In drawing this harrowing scene to a close the gallant captain of the Barcaiztegui must not be forgotten. He saw to the embarking of every man and was last on the ship. As she gave the final lurch he jumped into the sea and disappeared in the suction that drew under the ship's boats and crews.

Wilson in New York.

Washington, Sept. 27.—Postmaster General Wilson is in New York to-day, on private business, it is said.

IRISH NATIONAL ALLIANCE.

A New Organization Which Intends To Free the Green Isle.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—Birth was given by the Irish National convention yesterday afternoon to an organization, which has for its avowed oject the independence of Ireland and republic by physical force. The ashes of the Fenian brotherhood are rekindled, the national league with its trust in legislators and its reliance upon parliaments and enactments is buried from sight, and in its place rises the Irish National alliance of the world. Incidentally, too, the Irish parliamentary party across the Atlantic is repudiated, and henceforth will be deprived of the abundant revenues that have been contributed from this country for its maintenance and support. For the next two years at least New York city will be the seat of operations of the new movement. William Lyman, a wealthy Irish American of that city, having been selected as the first president of the alliance, with the authority to appoint a secretary of his own choice.

Irish Birth or Descent.

The plan of operations adopted provides for a central council with authority to issue charters for state organizations. Membership is limited to people of Irish birth or descent, and who shall pledge themselves to aid in the liberation of Ireland by any means "consistent with the laws and usages of civilized nations." The plan closely resembles that of the old Fenian brotherhood. Last evening the convention adjourned sine die.

Irish Newspaper Comment.

Dublin, Sept. 27.—United Ireland, referring to the national convention of Irish socieries at Chicago, says it rejoices that Irishmen have not abandoned the idea of using physical force to secure justice for Ireland. They will have to put this idea into practice some day, it adds, and the sooner they prepare to do so the better.

JERSEY'S OLDEST INHABITANT.

"Uncle Josie" Field Celebrates His 103d Birthday.

Red Bank, N. J., Sept. 27.—Joseph Field is probably the oldest person in New Jersey. Yesterday he celebrated his 103d birthday. He is a Middletown farmer, and his appearance is that of a man of about eighty years. Yesterday morning he rose at 7 o'clock, and as is his custom he spent nearly an hour about his farm before breakfasting. After breakfast he prepared himself for receiving callers, who visited him to tender their congratulations. About 10 o'clock he was driven to Red Bank by his son, Joseph, jr., in a two-wheel cart. This was the first time he had been here in five years. "Uncle Josie" was driven up and down Broad and Front streets, and shook the hands of several hundred persons, many being old acquaintances. He says he felt good at heart, but had a weakness in his knees and that his eyesight is getting poor. However, he does not wear eyeglasses and can see very plainly. His appearance and health generally is much better than it was a year ago. The old gentleman says he expects to vote next year for president.

CONSULAR OFFICERS.

A Number Who Cannot Be Entered Under Classified Service.

Washington, Sept. 27.—There are fifty-three consular offices above the limit of the recent executive order placing such government officials within the classified service, and seventy-one paid in fees below the limit. Of those affected, 175 are paid in salaries and twenty-one in fees. Of the 175 officials referred to, thirty consuls and one commercial agent are paid $2,500; fifty-two consuls and four commercial agents are paid $2,000; sixty-nine consuls and six commercial agents are paid $1,500, and thirteen consuls are paid $1,000. Nine consuls and twelve commercial agents are paid in fees that aggregate over $1,000. Those below the limit are fifty-three consuls and eighteen commercial agents. The maximum compensation by fees is $2,500, and the minimum by salary is $1,000. It is pointed out at the state department that it is impracticable to place those drawing a salary of $1,000 within the service, as they are usually citizens of the country in which they serve. The examination must be held in Washington, and it would not justify them to come here for that purpose.

TALMAGE ACCEPTS.

He Will Preach His First Sermon in Washington on Oct. 27.

Washington, Sept. 27.—The text of Dr. Talmage's letter accepting the call of the First Presbyterian church of this city to act as co-pastor with Rev. Dr. Sunderland is as follows: "The call signed by the elders, deacons, trustees and members of the congregation of the First Presbyterian church of Washington is before me. The statement contained in that call, that you do earnestly, unanimously, harmoniously and heartily, not one voice dissenting, desire me to become co-pastor in your great and historical church, has distinctly impressed me. With the same heartiness I now declare my acceptance of the call. All of my energies of body, mind and soul shall be enlisted in your Christian service. I will preach my first sermon Sabbath evening, Oct. 27."

SIX MEN KILLED.

Giant Powder Explodes in a Colorado Mine.

Leadville, Col., Sept. 27.—A terrific explosion of giant powder occurred yesterday afternoon in the Belgian mine. Six miners were killed and two injured. All the bodies were recovered.

Halloway Murder Trial.

Newport, Vt., Sept. 27.—Chase, the principal witnesses and one of the suspected parties in the Halloway murder case, has been captured in Canada and is now in jail here. The grand jury found a bill against Mrs. Halloway and the case will be tried here at the adjourned term in November.

Steel Works To Resume Operations.

Baltimore, Sept. 27.—President Wood of the Maryland Steel company announces that fires will be lighted under all the blast furnaces at Sparrows Point, and that the works will resume operations in all departments in a week or ten days. A large number of workmen will be employed.

Dunraven Through with America.

London, Sept. 27.—In an interview with a representative of the Central News, Commodor Glennie expressed his belief that Lord Dunraven's colors would never be seen in America again.

THE DUKE FEELS HURT

Cambridge Shows His Displeasure on Retirement.

The Former Commander-in-Chief of the British Forces Says He Could Have Gone on Longer, But It Was Thought Advisable That Others Should Follow Him.

London, Sept. 27.—The Duke of Cambridge, whose retirement as commander-in-chief of the forces was recently announced, and who was succeeded by Lord Wolseley, made a long speech at a luncheon which was given in his honor last evening at Edinburgh. He began his remarks by referring to the charge that he had opposed all changes that had been suggested in connection with the army. This charge he denied, maintaining that, on the contrary, he had always led in making changes that tended to add to the efficiency of the British troops. He said he regretted to have seen latterly that a strong notion existed that a member of the royal family was not suited to the chief command of the army. He held that a royal person could be placed, without necessarily considering his high degree, in any position for which he might be found to be fitted. He would not say that he was particularly fitted for the position he had held for thirty-nine years. He had filled it as best he could, and he had got more than his share of the criticism that always fell to the lot of great public officials.

Better To Work Than To Be Idle.

When a member of the royal family was found fit for his position, he continued, the public ought to be delighted to see him so placed. If he had gone about for thirty-nine years twirling his fingers and smoking cigars in the streets of London the people would not have thought much of him. He could have gone on much longer working at his post, but it had been thought advisable that others should follow him. He only hoped that his successors would end their careers feeling as much sentiment toward their office as he experienced at that moment.

Satisfied with His Work.

He had been consoled by the knowledge that he had done his duty in such a way that the army and the whole country had been satisfied. A feature of the monarchical principle was that those in the highest positions, while doing their duty to the state, were bound to be useful members of society. In accordance with this rule, he had never neglected the civil duties falling to a person in his position. The Duke of Cambridge was frequently interrupted by cheers during the delivery of his speech, which has created a sensation as an unexpected and outspoken valedictory.

SEALING IN BEHRING SEA.

Reports that British Schooners Are Violating the Law.

San Francisco, Sept. 27.—Information has come to the federal authorities here that many British sealing schooners have been carrying arms in defiance of the sealing treaty, and that the hunters have boldly violated the law. Complaints will be made to the state department. The information is given by American sea captains who have cruised in the Arctic regions since the Paris award in Behring sea matters. It is claimed, on the other hand, that Great Britain is carefully watching our vessels, and that every violation of law, however technical, is promptly reported.

WINNANS' FINE SHOOTING.

He Wins the Revolver Championship of the London Rifle Club.

London, Sept. 27.—The revolver championship of the South London Rifle club, which was decided yesterday, was won by Walter Winans of Baltimore by a score of 324 out of a possible 336. EXPLAINED.

Confidence in Their Product Led the Shakers to Make an Unusual Offer.

People of this day and generation are not disposed to give things away. When therefore the Mount Lebanon Shakers recently stated that any one could get a bottle of Digestive Cordial by calling in person at their New York office, it excited a great deal of talk.

One of the leading dailies of the Metropolis sent a reporter to find out what was meant. It developed that the preparation in question has proven beneficial in so large a majority of cases that nine-tenths of the people who are sufficiently anxious to call for a sample, find so much relief that they continue the product's use and tell their friends about it. As a result a very large demand has been created.

The Shakers have a long record of success as inventors and their various medicinal products have always enjoyed a high reputation. The Digestive Cordial is not only nourishing in in itself but it digests other foods when taken as directed.

Sleepless nights, spots before the eyes and a sense of heaviness after eating, loss of weight and general weakness are among the common symptons of indigestion which it promptly relieves, and it is gratifying to know that such a positive and harmless remedy as the Digestive Cordial should have at last been devised.

In order to find whether the Shaker Digestive Cordial is adapted to your case try a small bottle. Its effect is immediate. For sale by nearly all druggists.

DEAD FROM SNAKE BITE

A Little Girl Fatally Stung Inside the Mouth.

Baby Fashion, the Child Had Probably Kissed the Reptile After Fondling It Awhile—Her Life Might Have Been Saved Had the Calmette Treatment Been Given.

New York, Sept. 27.—Nettie Herring, twenty months old, the daughter of John Herring, a prosperous Jersey farmer, living near Camden, died yesterday from the effects of a snake bite received several days ago while playing in her father's back yard. Several prominent New York medical men have been interested in Nettie's case, as it afforded a rare opportunity to test the new treatment for poisonous snake bites discovered by Dr. A. Calmette of Paris and recently introduced in New York. The failure of the antidote, which has been so successful abroad, is attributed to a totally unwarranted supersitition of the child's parents. In some way Mr. and Mrs. Herring heard the physicians were trying a new medicine, and though they were imformed that Calmette's antidote was the only hope, they objected, the doctors say, to their little daughter being made a "subject for medical experiment." Mrs. Herring gave the doctors the following account of her discovery that her daughter had been bitten by a snake:

The Mother's Version.

She was busy with her household duties and left Nettie within watching distance from the kitchen door. The child played with her doll for awhile, then suddenly she dropped the plaything, crept across a grass plot, picked something up and seemed to fondle it. The mother could not see what that something was, but feeling sure that no harm could come to her little one, she went on with her work. A later glance showed the child in the same queer position. The baby seemed charmed and soon after fell to the ground as limp as a rag, but without making an utterance. Recovering herself the mother ran frantically to Nettie's side and found her infant daughter unconscious. Hissing by the side of the little body Mrs. Herring saw the snake, which was about fourteen inches long. The cause of the child's strange acting became evident to her, and she hurriedly picked the child up and carried it into the house. Mr. Herring had just returned from the field, and went for the nearest physician, who sent for the New York specialists. The examination made by the physicians was a long and tedious one. They found all the symptoms of snake poisoning but there seemed to be no indication of a bite anywhere on the child's body.

Stung in the Mouth.

The specialists were puzzled for a long time, but on examining the interior of the mouth, which is always the last resort in looking for any sort of a bodily mark, they discovered the spot where the reptile had buried its fangs. It then became evident to the doctors that, baby fashion, Nettie had kissed the viper, probably after fondling it awhile. Such an action on the part of the child could alone account for the bite being on the tip of her tongue, which had then already commenced to swell. For nine hours after being bitten Nettie first lay in a stupor and then writhed in inward spasms. The Calmette treatment, the doctors say, had just commenced to be effective when the parents became superstitious and ordered it stopped.

SPRUCE IV. AGAIN WINNER.

The American Cockle-Shell's Captain Was Afraid of Rough Water.

Center Island, Sept. 27.—The third race in the Seawanhaka club's international challenge series for small boats, sailed yesterday, resulted in a handsome victory for Spruce IV., the challenger, owner J. C. Field withdrawing Ethelwynn at the end of six miles, half the distance. As far as the contest was competitive, the English half-rater was a winner by nearly nine minutes, being handsomely sailed in a wind that made yachts like the forty-foot Norota put a double reef in her mainsail in order to travel with comfort while viewing the work of the tiny fighters, which were tossed like cockle-shells in the rollers kicked up by strong southwesterly breeze. On reaching the Centre Island buoy 8 minutes 58 seconds after Spruce IV. had started on the second run to leeward, Ethelwynn pulled out of the race, Mr. Field declaring that he would not risk his life in the rough water.

CZECH MUST HANG.

Pardon Board Refuses To Commute the Murderer's Sentence.

Jersey City, Sept. 27.—Judge Abel I. Smith, counsel for "Fish John" Czech, who is under sentence to be hanged on Thursday next in the Hudson county jail for the murder of his wife, said last evening that the board of pardons has refused to commute the sentence to imprisonment for life. Sheriff Tolley is making the necessary preparations for the execution.

Altoona, Pa., Sept. 27.—The Altoona foundry and machine works of this city have put their 300 workmen on ten hours' time. Orders are so rapidly coming in that the concern will run night and day, beginning with next week.

Temple Cup Series.

HIS ALIBI IS WEAK

Durrant's Position Growing Very Dark.

Dr. Cheney Has No Recollection of Seeing Him at the Medical College on the Fatal Day—Rev. Mr. Gibson Again Subtly Accused—Questions About a Bloodstained Shoe.

San Francisco, Sept. 27.—The keystone in the arch of Durrant's alibi was evidently seriously weakened yesterday. The witness upon whom the attorneys for the defense depended most to sustain their contention that Durrant was attending a lecture at Cooper medical college at the hour when Miss Lamont was murdered, gave disappointing testimony. Instead of testifying that Durrant was present at the lecture, as Attorney Duprey said Dr. Cheney would do, the doctor said he had no recollection of seeing the young medical student. He said, however, that he had faith in the reliability of the roll-call book. To offset this reverse the defense gained only one point, the admission as an exhibit of the roll-call book at the college, in which Duarant was recorded as present at the lecture given on the afternoon of April 3. The prosecution holds the roll-call book in little esteem from the fact that it was made from original slips, which have been destroyed. The prosecution will place witnesses on the stand to prove that Durrant frequently asked his classmates to answer to his name when he was absent, and that they complied with his request.

More Raps at the Pastor.

The defense put on three detectives to testify to matters about the door to the tower and about Pastor Gibson's study in Emanuel church. The shoe, with a bloodstain on the sole, belonging to Gibson, which was found in his study the morning after the finding of Minnie Williams' body, was produced and identified as having been among six shoes in the study. The door leading to the church tower with marks supposed to have been made with a chisel was shown in court. The blade of the chisel did not completely fit the marks in the door, and some of the detectives were not sure that they had not been made with a jimmy. The marks were such as might have been made with a jimmy, as well as with a chisel. One of the marks had been varnished, which indicated that it had been made before the time of the murders. There was also a mark in the door as though made with a hammer. The hammer and chisel, which, it is thought, were used in the making of these marks, were placed in evidence. They came from Rev. Gibson's tool box, always kept open in the never-closed study. The object of their introduction by the defense was to add to the material for connecting Gibson, at least by innuendo, with the crime. The defense announced that it would have between forty and fifty witnesses. This insures three weeks more of the trial.

YACHTSMEN ARE GUESSING.

Dunraven's Decision To Winter the Valkyrie Here Causes Comment.

New York, Sept. 27.—The action of Lord Dunraven in suddenly ordering Captain Cranfield to have the Valkyrie wintered on this side of the Atlantic, after the vessel was all refitted for the voyage home, has set the yachting fraternity guessing as to his reasons for changing his plans. The general belief, however, is that Valkyrie will engage in some of the much-discussed private matches with Defender early next season, if such can be arranged. It is also believed that Lord Dunraven, realizing that a fight to a finish between his yacht and Defender would be particularly acceptable both to his own countrymen and to American yachtsmen and the public, and that his action in withdrawing from the contest this year was due to a mistaken impulse, wishes to have a meeting between the boats and thus bring about a satisfactory ending.

October 3—Meeting of Victor Wheelmen.
October 4—Annual business meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Crescent Avenue church.

Franklin Murphy has been re-elected to the chairmanship of the Republican State committee.

Secretary Herbert yesterday signed an order transferring the monitor Ajax to the State of New Jersey for the use of the naval militia. It will be stationed at Camden for the use of the western division of the militia.

Clapp & Co's weekly financial letter says:

The feverish pulse and mercurial movement of a speculative craze are beginning to be noted. Experienced men see new estimates of values at hand based on the inflation of organized credit. With the Government credit at the centre, the money of account now available can be doubled without danger. The general knowledge that this new era of inflation is at hand will increase the courage of some, the timidity of others, and the nervous energy of all.

The nomination of Chancellor Alexander T. McGill for Governor by the Democrats is a selection that should bring to the party the votes of all Democrats, and when this is done the Democrats may count on a victory at the polls. New Jersey is a Democratic State under normal conditions. Of that there can be but little doubt when it is considered that its people have not been ruled by a Republican in thirty years. With Mr. McGill as their standard bearer, the Democrats go into the campaign with every reason to believe that they will gain another victory. Though long identified with public affairs his record in both official and private life has been such as to commend him to men of all parties as a man whose performance of duty to the public was always first to any act that might benefit the political party with whom he was affiliated. Though his public duties have been principally of a judicial nature, Mr. McGill's abilfties in an executive capacity will prove equally as satisfactory to the people he will serve.

Alexander T. McGill is of Pennsylvanian nativity. He was born in Pittsburg about forty-nine years ago. But in 1854, when he was in his eighth year, his father was elected to a chair in Princeton Theological Seminary, and the family moved to Trenton. Since that time he has been a resident of New Jersey, and as a Jerseyman he attained his present eminence. In 1864 the Chancellor took his degree of bachelor of arts at Princeton College. Two years later he finished at Columbia Law School. In 1867 he was admitted to the bar as an attorney, and in 1870 as a counselor. After leaving the law school young McGill entered the office of the late Justice of the Supreme Court, Edward W. Scudder. He maintained his relations with that distinguished jurist until he formed a business partnership with the late Robert Gilchrist, Attorney-General, and a man unsurpassed in oratory among Jerseymen. In 1874 he began his public career as counsel for the city of Bayonne. That same year he was elected to the Assembly to represent the First district of Hudson county. The next year, also, found him in the Assembly. There he met John W. Griggs, whose opponent for Governor Chancellor McGill is. These two were conspicuous in the framing of the general laws under the Constitution. Mr. McGill succeeded Abram Q. Garrettson, when the latter was appointed Law Judge of Hudson county, in the office of Prosecutor of Pleas, and later succeeded him on the bench. In 1887 Governor Green appointed him Chancellor and last year Governor Werts reappointed him.

AFRO-AMERICANS IN SESSION.

Work of the Colored Baptists at Their Convention.

When the Afro-American Association met in the Mt. Olive Baptist church yesterday afternoon at two o'clock the following officers were elected for the ensuing year. President, Rev. P. S. Gibson; Vice President, Rev. D. E. Robinson, Elizabeth; Clerk, Rev. S. W. Smith, Roselle; Corresponding Secretary, Rev. A. G Young, New Brunswick; Treasurer, Rev. W. H. Wallace, Asbury Park; Board of Managers, Rev. Wm. Perry, Montclair; Rev. J. H. Baily, Elizabeth. Rev. P. S. Gibson, Plainfield; Rev. W. D. Johnson, Westfield; Rev. E. Elliott, Mattawan; Rev. J. W. Jeffrey Plainfield; Rev. J. M. Joiner, Roselle; Rev. S. W. Smith, Roselle; Rev. W. H. Wallace, Asbury Park; Rev. A. G. Young, New Brunswick.

The only change in the trustees was the election of Rev. E. Elliott, of Mattawan and W. R. Connett, of Plainfield.

The service last evening consisted of preaching by Rev. J. A. Harris, of Orange, assisted by Rev. J. A. White of Lambertville, and Rev. Mr. Haskins, of Westfield.

The session opened this morning at 9:30 with devotional exercises, after which a number of reports were made.

This afternoon Mr. Pollard, of this city, a graduate of the Richmond Theological Seminary, will be ordained by the association to preach, and this evening a paper will be read by Rev. S. W. Smith, of Roselle, on the subject of "The most effectual way to reach the Negro Baptist."

THE SPIDER AND THE FLIES.

A Sensational Story on Tap That Will Startle People.

Plainfield people may soon expect to be made acquainted with the details of a very racy story, which will involve a number of prominent people into complications that are of the most embarrassing nature. As in all affairs of these kinds there is a woman in the case, and the methods which this fair damsel has put into play to capture what she wanted will resemble somewhat the story of the spider and the flies. The flies will be a lot of ordinarily sensible men, successful in business life and standing high in social circles, but whose common sense seems to have fallen by the wayside while they have fallen victims to the intrigues and deceits of a woman who had constructed such an apparently beautiful and innocent trap that will cause all the trouble.

It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

THEATRICAL.

One of the season's new attempts to add to the sum total of human happiness in the shape of a farce-comedy entitled "Girl Wanted," by R. N. Stephens, in which Frank Bush and an excellent company make an early appearance in this city. Mr. Bush's ability to mimic the tones, expression, and complete manner of almost any kind of human being, is well known. But besides great skill as a mimic, he has rare magnetism of personality and a sense of humor that makes him an irresistible funmaker in his own person. He has thus the complete equipment of a comedian. He demonstrates his power by playing a stranded actor who impersonates a half-dozen different people, in "Girl Wanted." Two of these people are of the feminine gender. Furthermore, he gives "specialties" in which he manifests abilities different from those shown by him in playing his many sided part. His managers, Davis and Keogh, have made him the central figure of a large company of clever funmakers of both sexes. The scene of "Girl Wanted" is laid successively in a New York flat, in a restaurant, and in a roof garden. At Music Hall Saturday night.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

HE DIDN'T LIKE THE SOLE.

And Told the Shoemaker So, But Kiely Settled the Matter.

An innocent pair of shoes was the cause of a quarrel that almost ended in a fight yesterday afternoon. There is a certain Jewish shoemaker on East Fourth street, near Watchung avenue, that is kept busy, day after day, in mending shoes for his fellow citizens in the neighborhood.

A day or two ago Sam Johnson, the colored bootblack on North avenue, brought a pair of shoes in to be mended. Yesterday afternoon he returned to get the shoes, but somehow the repairs did not suit his fancy and he told the shoemaker so. Then they both began to talk and Johnson, to show his disapproval, pulled the soles off the shoes. When the excitement waxed fiercer than ever, Sergeant Kiely suddenly appeared on the scene. At the advice of the officer, the shoemaker repaired the damage done and Johnson paid according to the first agreement. Then Sergeant Kiely waited until all was quiet again, and the colored man had gone on his way, after which the policeman followed suit.

Franklin Council's Celebration.

The members of Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., at their meeting last evening discussed the advisability of celebrating their anniversary next month. At first they thought it would be best to have a large time and invite several other councils, including State officers, but after discussion it was decided to have only the members of the council present, arrange a musical and literary programme and have a smoker. It will probably be held about October 6th. One proposition for membership was received and the usual action taken. The committee on new uniforms reported progress and hoped to have the same by the next meeting.

Taken Suddenly Ill.

Ex-Councilman Ernest R. Ackerman, who has been unwell for the past few days, was taken ill at his office in New York yesterday. His brother, Marion S. Ackerman, accompanied him to Plainfield in a private sleeping coach, arriving here about 3:30 in the afternoon. Upon their arrival in this city they were met by Dr. Endicott and the three were driven to Mr. Ackerman's home in a coach. The Doctor attributes his illness to close confinement to business and the excessive heat. It is thought he will be all right in a few days.

Out of Season, of Course.

A flock of thirty or forty quail took possession of Grove street, near Mercer avenue, yesterday afternoon and remained there this morning. They made themselves at home on the front lawns of the neighbors, and called for "Bob White" as they struted about. As they are out of season at present, they were left undisturbed, and seemed to understand that Plainfield is the prettiest place they can find about here.

A Big Job Proposed.

In speaking of the frequency of citizens being held up on the outskirts of Plainfield, a city councilman said last night that the State ought to employ a corps of men whose duty should be to go through the State from one end to the other and clear it of these highwaymen. In this way he thought that the difficulty could be removed.

Court Adjourns.

All cases in the Middlesex County Court at New Brunswick were adjourned yesterday until Thursday of next week, on account of the Democratic State convention at Trenton. Two cases in which City Judge Coddington and Lawyer George DeMeza are interested were among those that were to have come up yesterday.

—Miss Nugent, the nurse girl, who was associated with Mrs. Fernandez, wishes The Daily Press to say that the latter owes her $74 instead of $18, as stated yesterday.

A BREAK AND A REPAIR.

But Lawyer DeMeza Catches a Train with the Aid of Lawyer Coddington.

City Judge Coddington and Lawyer George DeMeza were returning from New Brunswick yesterday afternoon with Judge Coddington's team and buggy. Mr. DeMeza was anxious to reach Plainfield in time to catch the 6:04 train to New York, and in consequence the Judge gave the horses full play, causing the telegraph poles to look like toothpicks.

When the distance had been half covered one of the clips on the shafts broke, allowing it to strike the horses' feet. This frightened the team and they started to run. The Judge's presence of mind averted an accident for he turned them into a woods near by, bringing them to a full stop. The break was then repaired and the balance of the trip was made in safety. Mr. DeMeza reached the city in time to catch his train.

BISHOP IN THE SLUMS

HE SPENDS HIS VACATION AMONG THE POOR IN NEW YORK.

The Head of the Metropolitan Diocese of the Episcopal Church, Leaves His Mansion to Live for a Month in the Most Crowded Tenement House Districts.

If it is true that people leave their homes during vacation time and live in smaller places, with which they are less familiar and where they have less comfort than in their own homes, not because they prefer them to their native places but because they want an absolute change, then Bishop Potter made a good selection when he exchanged his Washington Square mansion for No. 130 Stanton street, N. Y. It would be hard to imagine a completer change in fact. The Bishop might have found places in Europe nearly like the one which he selected for his summer vacation; in truth, the densely populated part of the city where the Cathedral Mission stands resembles in many respects the Judenstadt of Prague and the old part of Odessa.

The mission is in a part of the city of which but few of the better class of people know little or nothing. It is traversed by public conveyances which few of the upper residents of the city have ever seen, and the streets are less familiar to them than many an avenue that lies on the other side of the ocean. Its signs are written in characters unknown to them. It has its circulating libraries which contain only books written with Hebrew characters to express phonetically bad German. It has six daily papers printed in Hebrew characters, and a large Russian population. In addition to the Russians, there are also many Italians. In addition to these two classes, there is a small sprinkling of Germans.

In the midst of this district, where tenement houses rise high in the air, where many blocks shelter from 2,000 to 2,400 people each, where the gospel of cleanliness has not yet been accepted, where men and women look prematurely old, where hard work and a crust are all there is of life, where childhood is without pleasure, where manhood is endless toil and old age a burden—there is the Cathedral Mission, in which the Bishop makes his home.

The house is part of the great Cathedral scheme, and is the center of a number of charities to which the clergyman in charge devotes his time and attention.

"The Rev. Francis R. Bateman is away on his vacation and some one must attend to to his duties, so I have come here, and I simply do for Mr. Bateman what he would do for me if it were in his power."

These were the words of Bishop Potter when he spoke of becoming a resident of Stanton street. "There is nothing in it," he says, "and it should cause no discussion or comment."

The Bishop's apartments are small and plain, but comfortable, much more so than those of an army officer in camp. He sleeps in a small room near his study, has his breakfast at 7 a. m. and at 8 o'clock is ready to receive his visitors, who begin to arrive long before that time. These consist of professional mendicants, worthy poor, heads of charity organizations, friends who come to congratulate the Bishop on his good work and curious East Siders who want to see how a Bishop looks.

After 10 a. m. the Bishop makes calls in the neighborhood, possibly investigates some of the charity cases, calls on the sick and does such work—to use his own words—"as a priest of a parish should do."

Later in the day he goes to the See House, for Bishop Potter, of course, is Bishop still, and attends to his duties as such, although he lives in Stanton street. At 7:30 p. m. he is back in his little study receiving visitors and directing the work of the mission. He comes and goes by horsecar, and the boys about the mission and on the streets near by know him and stop in their play and sometimes swallow a bad word when he passes and salute him respectfully.

Freckle Cures.

Do the early summer freckles prove stubborn? There is usually a clamor for "freckle cures" about this time of the year, and the very best thing that proves reliable year after year is simply common buttermilk. Secure it as fresh as possible; it will be found that nothing can equal this fresh buttermilk for removing tan, freckles, sunburn or moth spots.

It has the great advantage that it does not injure the skin, but makes it soft and white. Take a soft sponge and bathe the face, neck and arms before retiring for the night; then wipe off the drops lightly. In the morning wash it off thoroughly and wipe dry with a crash towel. Two or three such baths each week during the summer months will take off and keep off the tan and freckles and keep the skin smooth and soft.

The Handicap of Life in Kansas.

"Why are not men more beautiful?" asks Frances E. Willard. They are, Frances, but it is a hard strain to be both beautiful and good out in this country. After a man reaches 51 the wear and tear is terrific; that is why so many men cannot be both beautiful and good. An epitaph in the Abilene cemetery, where lies buried many a sweet, good man who died with his boots on, about tells the story:

Here lies the body of Joseph Rank,
Who lived and died a hardened crank.
For his first twenty-one years he never fell,
Which, in this country is mighty well.

Nothing so Aristocratic.

"My daughter is too democratic in her ideas," sighed Mrs. Hawkins. "I wish there was some way to make her an aristocrat."

"Send her to a cooking school," said Mrs. Barlow. "There is nothing more haughty than a good cook."—Harper's Bazar.

BUILDING SKYWARD.

DANGERS THAT THREATEN HIGH BUILDINGS IN CITIES.

An Architect Who Plans Them Calls Upon Legislative Bodies to Fix a Reasonable Limit. Offices One Thousand Feet Up Now Thoroughly Practicable.

In view of the constantly increasing height of modern office buildings, a reporter for the New York Times asked George H. Post, the architect of the new Havemeyer Building, which is going up on the site of the former Herald office in New York, what was the limit, in practice or in theory, of the height of office buildings; what factors would tend to keep the height down, and what causes would be likely to bring about the destruction of the tall buildings now in use after they had served their purpose for half a century or more.

"The passenger elevators solved the problem of making the upper stories of high buildings available for office purposes. Then we had a number of buildings erected, such as the Tribune Building and the Mills Building, where the floors still rested on the exterior walls for their main support. This was about twenty years ago. It was found, however, that the immense size of the piers and the thickness of the walls in the lower stories took up so much space that some plan of lessening the weight of the floors which rested upon them had to be devised. This brought about the cage construction, at first used simply to carry the floors, and afterward to sustain the whole weight of the building, the outer walls being merely panels of stone held in place by the horizontal steel beams at the division between two stories.

"The upright steel beams when built into the walls are removed from all possibility of examination without tearing the building down. In the second place, there is danger from the effects of large fires exterior to the building itself.

"Suppose a big fire was to start opposite a building constructed with steel pillars near the surface of the walls, the heat might do incalculable damage by warping and twisting the pillars.

"To avert these dangers, the most recent method of constructing cages is to place the steel uprights just inside of the outer walls and push the ends of the horizontal beams out far enough to support the walls, cantilever fashion. This permits an examination of every essential part of the cage, and, at the same time, protects it from the possibility of danger from exterior fires."

"How high could a building be made, from a theoretical point of view?" the reporter asked.

"The Eiffel Tower, in Paris, is 950 feet high," said Mr. Post, "and there is no engineering difficulty in making an office building equally high, or even higher. The commercial limit, however, will not be much greater than 300 feet. The question of elevator accomodation and light will step in at this limit, even if the Legislature does not keep down the height to a proper proportion of the width of the street, as it ought to do next session."

"What will be the final end of the tall buildings in New York City? Will it be earthquakes or the day of judgment?" suggested the reporter.

"Neither. Earthquakes are not common in this part of the world, and the heaviest buildings must yield to time," was Mr. Post's reply.

"The three dangers to those buildings which may bring about their individual demolition in the course of two or three generations are corrosion of the metal work, heat from exterior fires and future inadequacy to resist wind strains. I have already spoken of the danger from exterior fires. The corrosion of the metal work is a serious matter, because it may come on very gradually, and because owners are so careless about keeping such details constantly and carefully inspected.

"I do not mean that looking at the steel framework every day is what should be done, because if the framework itself is to be properly preserved it should be covered in with damp-proof material to resist rust, and with some non-conducting substance, such as hollow bricks, to resist interior fires."

Queen Victoria's Meals.

Queen Victoria is rather simple in her tastes, as a rule. For instance, a kind of natural soup very often finds its way on the menu. The wine served with it is white sherry, which her Majesty generally drinks from a beautiful gold cup formerly belonging to Queen Anne. Boiled beef and pickled cucumbers—a favorite dish with Prince Albert—invariably follow the soup, while a baron of beef is likewise a constant feature. It is noteworthy that the Queen still adheres to the old practice of having the cook's name called out as each dish is brought to the table. This custom dates back to the days of George II., and had its origin in a conspiracy against one Weston, formerly an assistant, whom the King had raised to the dignity of chief mouth cook. His late comrades, jealous of his preferment, endeavored to disgrace him by tampering with the dishes. Upon Weston proving the existence of this plot to his royal master, the latter gave orders that in the future as each dish was brought on, the name of its cook should be called out, in order that praise or blame might be bestowed where due.

CHAPTER VI.

The death of Lawyer Corvin and the events attending it were matter of absorbing interest to all the inhabitants of Fenbrook, and rendered the little village famous, for a time, far beyond its boundaries. Some curious circumstances were brought to light in connection with the affair.

To begin with, of course, an inquest was held upon Corvin's body, and an autopsy made; the proximate occasion of death was found to be heart-failure. It cannot be said that anybody was greatly grieved over the unhappy man's decease; those who want friends, in this world, must make them—they do not exist spontaneously. Corvin had during his life busied himself about many things, but he had neglected the friend-making industry. Nor were his sins of omission only. But while some of his misdeeds came to light after his death, that event also showed that he was innocent of at least one crime of which he had been suspected.

The story came out piecemeal, as occasion required; but we will hear it in its final and connected form, along with Nancy and Nellie, as they sat in the old sitting-room, before the wood fire, after the vibrations of the first wonder, horror and bewilderment had been abated by time. Tom Linton was the narrator—Morford, as he was known to the world of electricians and men of affairs.

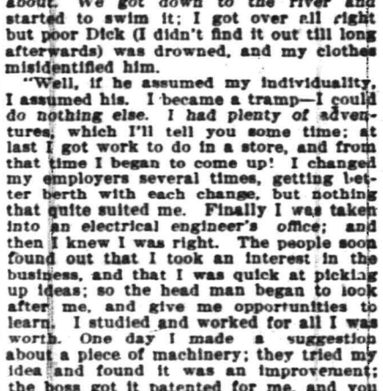
"How was it that my clothes were found on that drowned body? A simple accident. That night in the lock-up, Dick, the tramp boy, and I, made a hole through the roof—he standing on my shoulders to do it—and then we made a rope by tying his clothes and mine together, up which I climbed, hand over hand. Then we dropped down outside, and untied the clothes, and put them on again; but dressing in the dark and in a big hurry, we got them changed about. We got down to the river and started to swim it; I got over all right but poor Dick (I didn't find it out till long afterwards) was drowned, and my clothes misidentified him.

"Well, if he assumed my individuality, I assumed his. I became a tramp—I could do nothing else. I had plenty of adventures, which I'll tell you some time; at last I got work to do in a store, and from that time I began to come up! I changed my employers several times, getting better berth with each change, but nothing that quite suited me. Finally I was taken into an electrical engineer's office; and then I knew I was right. The people soon found out that I took an interest in the business, and that I was quick at picking up ideas; so the head man began to look after me, and give me opportunities to learn. I studied and worked for all I was worth. One day I made a suggestion about a piece of machinery; they tried my idea and found it was an improvement; the boss got it patented for me, and you may imagine how pleased I was. It brought me some money, and I used it in books and study; I made up my mind to be another Edison, and then to come back and make you rich—you two girls—and vindicate my reputation. For the last two years I worked on a plan I had conceived of making things grow by electricity applied through the soil. I managed it, finally, got my patent, and you know the rest. You can dress in gold lace and diamonds, if you want to, Aunt Nancy; and as for you, Nellie, you are going to be a famous beauty and heiress!"

"But you said you'd tell about the fairies," said the child.

"Oh, yes! Well, the beginning of that is away back, before I was born, or Aunt Nancy either, for all I know. But my first knowledge of it was on the very night of the Corvin robbery.

"I'd been out that night after woodchuck, as I said at my examination next morning; but I didn't tell where else I'd been. You see, I used to make a sort of store-house and hiding-place of the cave; but there was a secret at the end of the cave that no one but I knew of, and there I used to put my most precious valuables.



"AND THE MOUTH GRINNING AT ME!"

It was faced up with planks then, just as you and I saw them the other day, Nellie. I had never explored the hole to the end; I didn't suppose there could be anything interesting in it; but on this night, when I went to put in my woodchucks, ready to skin next day, I thought I'd see how far it went. Somebody before my time must have known about it, I thought, because the entrance had been so carefully cause the entrance had been so carefully there! I had a lantrn, and in I went.

"It was quite a good corridor; I didn't have to stoop, though it was very narrow. Instead of going down, as I expected, it slanted up; and, soon, to my astonishment, I came to the foot of a sort of shaft, four or five feet in diameter, and going straight up. It was like a chimney. A kind of rough ladder was fixed to the side of it, and I began to climb it. At first I couldn't imagine where I was; the sides of the chimney seemed to be of wood, but crumbly and rotten. There was a strong smell of wood dry-rotted. Sometimes I heard a faint creaking and rustling sound. Then, all of a sudden, I solved the mystery. I was in the trunk of the big butternut!

"Up I went. I was pretty well excited with the adventure by that time, but I had no conception of what was to come. I got to the top of the ladder, and there was a little, irregular chamber, in the heart of the tree, not much bigger than a sentry box, partly floored with plank, and with a bench or shelf running round it. There were things hanging or fastened to the walls; an old gun, for one thing, and a leather bag, and various queer odds and ends, as if some one used to live [illegible] On one side of the shelf there was [illegible] bound with iron. I tried the lid, and found it unlocked. I lifted it, and saw a great heap of gold coins, and a bundle of papers!

"I thought I was Aladdin, sure enough, then. I turned to find a place to hang my lantern, so I could have both hands free. There was a heap of something lying or propped up on the bench behind me: old clothes it seemed to be; I took hold of it to move it aside, and got hold of something that made my hair rise. It felt like a bony hand. I pushed aside the folds of decaying cloth, and looked. It was a hand! And then, shining yellowish white in the light of the lantern, I saw a face—a skull, with the skin stretched dry over the bones, and the mouth grinning at me!"

"Oh, land sakes, bless my heart!" quavered Nancy, who had heard the tale before, but was more scared with every repetition. "To think of poor dear Matt all those years! My soul alive!"

"I didn't know it was Uncle Matt at that time," continued Tom, giving his hand to Nellie, to cling to through the terrors of the narrative. "I don't think I knew anything till I found myself out in the open air at the mouth of the cave. No boy ever was more frightened than I, and I lived through it. I lay awake the rest of the night, in a succession of cold sweats, wondering what it all meant, and what I should do about it. The next morning, before I had made up my mind, I was arrested, as you remember, and so was prevented from doing anything.

"But I thought it over and over, for years afterwards, and it gradually became clearer to me. The body must be that of Uncle Matt. The box of money, of course, was his; he kept it there for safety, and, perhaps, used to go up there to count it over, as folks of his peculiar temperament are said to enjoy doing. That evening he disappeared, saying he was going to see Corvin, he must have gone up there to get the deed for the ten thousand dollars; but he died while he was up there, whether by apoplexy, or how, of course we shall never know. All we do know is that Old Corvin didn't murder him.

"From some of the indicators there I should judge that this secret place was known to the Billops for may be generations back; they made it and used it to keep valuables in, or for whatever purpose might arise. The knowledge of it may have been handed down from father to son; but Uncle Matt having no son, the secret would have died with him, but for the accident of my finding it out.

"Now, when I was ready to come back here, under the name of Morford, and clean things up, I was rather bothered how to go to work. I visited the tree again, and found everything just as before; and noticed, among the things up there, an old broken-down accordion, and a sort of speaking trumpet, that puzzled me at first, until I concluded they must have been used by Uncle Matt to make his ghost-manifestations with, by way, I suppose, of additional security against having his hiding-place disturbed. That gave me an idea, and I bought a new accordion. I had learned that Corvin was going to foreclose his mortgage; of course I might have come out in my own colors at once and paid it off, but I had reasons for waiting to do things in another way. So the night the money was due, I took the accordion, and climbed up in the tree.

DROPPED THE BAG DOWN THE CHIMNEY.

I took enough money out of the box, put it in a strong paper bag, and made it fast by a string to the end of a long, jointed fishing-pole I had brought along. Then, after playing on the accordion until I knew I had caught your attention, I climbed out of the hole in the top of the chamber, and got out on a branch, and dropped the bag down the chimney. After that I said a few words through the old speaking-trumpet, to settle any scruples of conscience you might feel; stuck the deed where Nellie might find it when I took her up there next day, and went home. You know the rest."

"Then there were no fairies!" said Nellie, with a sigh.

"Not that time, perhaps; but that doesn't prove there may not be plenty of them when they are needed."

"You've not told about Peter," said Nancy.

"Oh, to be sure! I ran across poor sumption, and hadn't a cent in his pock-Peter in New York; he was dying of consets. I got him a good bed in a hospital, and used to go and see him. One day he told he the truth about that robbery. He had put up the job on me, as he expressed it, whether with or without his father's connivance, he didn't say. He had put my knife where it was found (having first stolen it from me), and had put the money and things in my pocket while we had been in bathing. He not only told me this, but he insisted on having a lawyer up there, to take down his statement in legal form, so that it would be evidence to clear me in court. He was very penitent, and of course I couldn't help seeing very forgiving. But I still had a crow to pick with old Corvin himself, and as you know I did it only too thoroughly."

"Poor man! I'm jest downright sorry for him," said Nancy, with tears on her cheeks. "I'm glad I never believed he killed poor Matt. But whatever did possess him to be so hard after me, and to want to take away the very roof over my head? I never did him no harm that I know of."

"That's very easy to explain, Aunt Nancy," said Tom. "He was never easy in his mind about Uncle Matt. At first he thought he might come back, and get the land away from him; and then he thought that he must have hidden the deed somewhere about the place, and that you might find it any day. So he never could get a moment's peace until the house and all about it was his, and you were driven out of the way. But we were too much for him!"

"But then what under the canopy did he ask me to marry him for?" demanded Nancy, perplexedly.

"Who wouldn't want to marry you, if they could, you blessed old creature?" said Tom, leaning over and kissing her.

And he would have knocked any man down who should have ventured to suggest any other interpretation of that enigma.

FAIR WAGE EARNERS

REASONS FOR THE GENERAL DECREASE IN SALARIES.

More Women Are Coming Into the Trades Every Year. In Garment Making Cheap Foreigners Are Doing the Work. Beginners Supplant Experienced Hands.

For the past two years there has been a steady increase in the wages of women-workers. The decrease seems likely to go further. Wages are going down all the time, and in every department of trade. There are several reasons for this. One is the constant increase of foreigners. Women from other countries come in hordes to America, all eager to earn a livelihood, and willing to do so at such rates as the American woman could not afford to even think of. Employers, however, with an eye to profits, are but too anxious to get the cheapest labor.

A second reason for the decrease is the methods of most shops and manufactories. Not only do these openly cut down earnings whenever possible, but they resort to all sorts of devices and ruses for doing so.

During the holiday season, for instance, each store takes on an extra supply of saleswomen. Young women and girls are especially sought after, as they live with their parents and have smaller living expenses, and are able to work for lower wages than the wholly self-supporting.

But when the holidays are over it is not the extras who are turned off. It is the older women, who come higher, and who should be entitled to some consideration, one would think, from long and faithful service. The latter, however, counts for nothing against cheapness. Machinery is a third vital reason for the reduction in women's wages. With the introduction of labor saving inventions hand labor becomes worth less money, if it is not thrown aside altogether.

A fourth cause for the wage diminishment is the willingness of so many women to work for practically nothing. This is a kind of competition against which the self supporting are powerless.

"The trouble about stenography and typewriting nowadays," a young woman was overheard to say at a lunching place the other day, "is that so many women will work just for practice. That's why I was discharged from my last place. A girl came to my employer and said she would do all the work he wanted simply for the practice. Of course he jumped at that.

"After awhile, though, she thought she'd learned enough to be getting money for it. But, bless you, he had learned something too. He calmly let her go and went and got some other girl who was willing to do it just for practice; and then when he was through with her he got another one. That's the way lots of employers do nowadays—they'd rather have 'prentice work for nothing than first class work that they have to pay for. But it's awfully rough on us bread and butter winners."

Yet another reason for the lowering of women's wages is the fact that men are entering largely into the employments hitherto considered as belonging strictly to women.

Men are now employed at making hats, caps, suspenders, dressmaking, cloak making, washing in laundries, and the like—work which ten years ago was all done by women. These men are mostly Poles, Hungarians and Italians, who will work for infinitesimally small sums. When one considers that at present rates women are unable to earn more than from 30 to 60 cents per day, it is hard to conceive how wages could go any lower. But investigation shows that such is the case. The army of unemployed women is, however, steadily on the increase. Said Miss Alice Woodbridge, secretary of the New York Workingwomen's Society:

"The trouble is there are so many more women to fill places than there are places to fill."

"For years I had suffered from falling of the womb, inflammation of the stomach, and weakness of the female organs. "I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and found a perfect cure in it for these troubles." MRS. LIZZIE DECLINE, 224 Grand Street, Jersey City, New Jersey.

A NIGHT OF PLEASURE.

Young People of the Church of Heavenly Rest Give An Entertainment.

The young peoples entertainment last night in the Parish House of the Heavenly Rest, on Clinton avenue, was a success. The greatest credit is due to Miss Yaeger and Miss Graves for all the pains and trouble they took in the rehearsals, and the audience which filled the hall showed how they appreciated the result of their labors. Miss Ida Tallamy opened with a piano solo, which was followed by an amusing dialogue between Messrs. Walter Sherwin and Ridley Morgan. Then a recitation by Miss Nellie Morgan, followed by a laughable play called "A Boy's Plot," in which the characters were taken by Miss Libbie Dennick, Miss Maggie Porter, the Misses Alma Jackson, Carrie Howard, Rache Schunk, Ida Utzinger, Viola Seivers, Sallie Emory, and Edith Millington, George Graves, Reynolds and Sherwin; Miss Dennick being called away at the last moment, Mrs. C. W. Lines kindly took her part, and made a great character of the Widow Smith. Then came a recitation by the Misses Dottie Smalley, Lizzie Hendry and Helen Fulton. Afterwards a pretty hoop drill by eight young ladies, every two hoops being of different colors.

Miss Viola Seivers gave a recitation; Master Sherwin sang a song; and the performance closed with a clever play called "Independents," in which the parts were well taken by Miss Yaeger, Miss Clark, the Misses Graves, and the Messrs Burt and Will Tallamy. In the drill were the Misses Cora Hart, pence, Mary Porter, Jackson, Schunk, Seivers, Maggie Porter, Carrie Howard, and Annie Peterson.

In Honor of a Friend.

A very pleasant social gathering was held at the home of Miss Cora Richardson, of East Sixth street, last evening, in honor of Miss May Coyn, of Jersey City. The evening was spent very enjoyably in games and dancing, while refreshments daintily served added to the pleasure. Among those present were the Misses Charlotte Messersmith, Mamie F. Steiner, Alice Jenkins, Eva Jenkins, Mary Giles, Jennie Giles, Will Townley, Judson R. Giles, Burt Steiner, Will Havens and Bert Fletcher, Will Slate and George F. Richardson, of Dunellen.

Preferred The Side Door.

A horse, attached to a cariage in which were two women, ran away at Dunellen this morning and threw the women out in front of the postoffice. The horse then tried to enter the side entrance of one of the stores but was caught before further damage resulted. Another horse, frightened by the runaway, came very near trampling on the passengers of the runaway rig. They were not seriously injured, however, by their tumble.

A Whist Club Organized.

A whist club was organized at the home of Thomas U. Smith on Wednesdap evening by eight young men from this city. Those who were present were Edgar I. Serrell, Charles H. Angleman, Guernsey Nevius, Will Coriell, Charles Hazeltine, Thomas U. Smith, George Snediker and Arthur W. Vail.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Twelve members of the Y. M. C. A. Bicycle Club had a run to New Brunswick, last night, starting at 7:30, in charge of Captain Thomas Cumming. Wven they reached their destination they stopped at the Y. M. C. A. building where they were royally entertained by the home members. An excellent musical and literary programme was prepared after which a fine collation was served. They arrived home about midnight, well pleased with their trip.

STRANGE AMERICAN CUSTOMS.

A Matter of Considerable Surprise to Foreign Tourists.

"I have been in America but two days," said the talkative foreigner, "but already I have become impressed with some of the strange customs of the country."

"Indeed! What particular customs do you refer to?"

"Well, for one thing, I had not been ashore for more than one hour when a spruce official looking man came up to me. He showed a silver badge of some sort and said he was a collector of the internal revenue. He asked if I had paid my side whisker license yet. I told him that I didn't know side whiskers were taxed in America. He said they were, and that the tax was $4 a year. He added that I might consider myself lucky that he did not add 25 per cent. for cost of collection, because it was my duty to report at City Hall and pay the tax, without putting the nation to the expense of sending a collector after the money."

"You paid him, did you?"

"Oh, yes, and I was quite glad that I did not wear a full beard. He said the assessments on full beards was $10 per chin. Why do you have such odd taxes in America? Is it so very expensive to run a republican government?"

"It costs quite a good deal. But was that your only experience?"

"No, it wasn't. About two hours later another man approached me, asked me if I had yet procured the Government permit entitling me to wear trousers of such a wide stripe as those I had on. It was the same pair I'm wearing now. I asked what the blamed Government would do if I refused to pay for such a permit. He replied that the fee for the permit was so excessively small that no one tried to evade payment. It was only $2 he said. The penalty was the confiscation of the trousers, and it would be his painful duty to take me to the nearest police station and take posession of my garments in the name of the United States Government if I manifested any further hesitancy about producing the $2. As I did not want a scene, I paid him the money and he left."

"You would have done well to have allowed him to take you to the police station."

"Why?"

"You could have told your story, and he would have been locked up on a charge of swindling."

"Do you mean to say that he was not an official of the Government?"

"That's what I mean."

"But he said he was."

"I'm very much afraid that he didn't speak the truth."

"But how about the other?"

"He was a fraud, too."

"But he showed me his badge."

"That cuts no ice."

"I beg pardon! It doesn't do what?"

"I said it cut no ice. I meant that it was of no significance. Thieves can get badges when they deem it necessary to use them in their business."

"But who are the real officers who issue permits to wear striped trousers, and who receive the tax on side whiskers?"

"There are no such officers."

"And no such taxes?"

"No."

"Then they both lied?"

"Yes."

"Well, I never would have thought it. Do you suppose that others will try to do me up in this way?"

"It would not surprise me in the least."

"Allow me to thank you for putting me on my guard, sir. I pay no more taxes except at the City Hall. Good-day, sir."—Harper's Bazar.

MRS. VOEHL LEAVES HOME.

SAID TO HAVE RUN AWAY WITH BILLY TRUST.

Mrs. Voehl Said to Have Taken a Large Sum of Money From Her Husband—Traced to a Hotel in Elizabeth.

George Voehl, who owns a bakery in Plainfield, was in this city this morning searching for his wife, said the Elizabeth Journal last night. He visited Police Headquarters and asked the assistance of Chief Tenney. Voehl suspected that his wife was accompanied by W. F. Trust, a man of leisure, who has an income from an estate, and who is well known among the sporting houses in this city.

Trust has been a boarder at Voehl's for some time, and the baker suspected that his wife had transferred her affections to that gentleman. As both were missing yesterday Voehl believed they had eloped.

Voehl said his wife had taken between five and six hundred dollars belonging to him. On reaching this city he traced the couple to Hynes' hotel. He was at the hotel early this morning and was satisfied that his wife and Trust were there.

Chief Tenney detailed Detective McGrail to accompany Voehl and his friend who accompanied him, to the hotel. There they found Trust, who denied all knowledge of the whereabouts of Mrs. Voehl, or that he had accompanied her from Plainfield.

Trust was corroborated by the hotelkeeper, who said that the accused man became a guest at the hotel early in the week, and that Mrs. Voehl had not been his companion.

Hynes admitted that Mrs. Voehl was at the hotel yesterday, but he said as soon as he learned who she was he refused to allow her to stay there. She went away in the afternoon.

Detective McGrail and Voehl were shown through the hotel, and Mrs. Voehl was not to be found.

Trust was very indignant, and refused to go voluntarily with Detective McGrail to Police Headquarters. He was, however, taken there and questioned by Chief Tenney, who was satisfied that he could not be held responsible for the freaks of Voehl's runaway wife, and he was accordingly discharged. He threatens to bring an action for false arrest.

When Mrs. Voehl left home Tuesday afternoon about five o'clock she gave out the impression that she was only going for a walk, but she failed to appear at home that night, and the following day her husband and friends made an investigation and found that she had purchased a railroad ticket to Newark. It was intended to go to Newark to look for her, but it was afterwards learned that she had gone to Elizabeth instead. Here her husband and a friend went on Thursday and encountered substantially the experience as recited by The Elizabeth Journal above.

Mr. Voehl had been extremely kind to his wife and lavished a great deal of money on her in the way of dresses and other things that are supposed to be dear to a woman's heart. The couple have two bright little children. Mr. Voehl consulted with Judge Coddington this morning and to provide against allowing her to run any bills on his account he legally publishes her as leaving his home, and warns all not to trust her on his credit.

New Real Estate Company.

The Plainfield Real Estate Company filed articles of incorporation in Elizabeth yesterday with the Clerk of Union county. The company will deal in real estate located in Plainfield, Newark, Orange, Trenton, Elizabeth and Westfield. Its capital is placed at $50,000 and it will begin business with $24,000. The principal stockholders are Aaron D. Thompson, of Plainfield, and William Scheerer, of Orange. The other incorporators are Robert H. McCarter, of Newark: Nicholas W. Birdsell, of New Brunswick, and Hobart E. Ryder, of Plainfield.

And He Left.

An Italian, with the rather inappropriate name of Mike Sullivan, came up before Judge Coddington at the City Court this morning on the charge of vagrancy. The Judge allowed the man to go on a promise to leave town at once.

THAT DEAR LITTLE BEE.

He Grows Covetous and George Richards Suffers in Consequence.

A novel contest took place in the yard of Leal's School last Thursday, which resulted rather disastrously for one of the unwilling contestants.

George Richards, of East Front street, was enjoying an apple and while he ate he looked around. A bee saw that apple and the spirit of covetousness filled his little heart. He made a bee-line for that apple and lit on the spot where young Richards was just about to take a bite. Richards's eye was wandering about and did not rest on the wicked bee. The next moment there was war, for Richards took a bite of apple and incidentally of the bee. The covetous bee flew around inside of Richards's mouth and stung him several times until at last he made his exit through the mouth of his victim. The usual remedy of mud was impossible, so Richards had to grin and bear the pain.

A STRONG ELEVEN.

The Y. M. C. A. Football Team are Hard at Work Practicing.

Plainfield is going to have a good football eleven, says Manager L. E. Waring, of the Y. M. C. A. football team, and he ought to know. The candidates were in the gymnasium last evening practicing under his direction. There were about sixteen present and the evening was spent very beneficially in using the tackling bag, falling on the ball and other practice. Several new candidates showed up and the team back of the line will be especially strong. The only weak point is at centre, and the man for that position has not yet appeared.

The team will meet on the old Harned Academy field this afternoon and everyone is invited to come and give the team a little practice.

CONTEST IN PARK CLUB ELECTION.

The Regular Ticket Will Have Opposition for the First Time.

A lively contest is expected at the Park Club election, to be held Tuesday, October 1st.

The regular ticket will receive opposition for the first time in the club's history. The regular ticket is composed of the following members: George P. Dupee, George Hallock, Benjamin Day, George Worth, Charles Reed, Julius Erickson, Augustus VanDeventer, George Rogers, and Will Runyon. The opposition ticket is as follows: George P. Dupee, George Hallock, Charles Reed, Benjamin Day, George Worth, Henry McGee, Samuel Townsend, W. J. Roome, and Elston French.

To Sing in Opera.

Alfred E. Holmes, of East Fifth street, has secured a position as baritone with the Duff Opera Company, and will join them October 1st. The company will make a short tour and then return to the Garrick Theatre in New York for the winter. Mr. Holmes' friends will no doubt be pleased to attend the opening performance and will watch with interest his first appearance in the city. He has a remarkable voice, which should bring him fame.

Inter-Scholastic Tennis.

The long talked of tennis match between Leal's school and the North Plainfield public school was played off this morning, and the Leal's school cracks defeated their opponents after a lively match. The representatives of Leal's school were W. Wadsworth and W. L. Glenney, and by their excellent playing succeeded in defeating North Plainfield's champions, Wm. Loizeaux and John H. VanWinkle, Jr., by the score of 6-2, 6-2, 6-3.

To Have an Operation.

J. W. Tilney, who has been very ill in New York for some time, was taken to the home of his son-in-law, W. B. Wadsworth, of West Eighth street, in the ambulance this afternoon, to have an operation performed there by Dr. Endicott. He was brought home in a special parlor car.

John G. Mauger Editor of the Sunbeam, Seligman, Mo., who named Grover Cleveland for the Presidency in November 1882, while he was Mayor of Buffalo, N. Y., is enthusiastic in his praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. He says: "I have used it for the past five years and consider it the best preparation of the kind in the market. It is as staple as sugar and coffee in this section. It is an article of merit and should be used in every household. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

RELAY RACE THE FEATURE.

EVENTS OF THE FIELD DAY OF THE HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETES.

A Medal Will be Given for the All Around Championship, and a Trophy for the Class Scoring the Most Points.

The committee which was appointed to arrange for the coming field day of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association on October 12th is not a slow one by any means, and the members have not allowed the grass to grow under their feet in their efforts to make the event a success. The committee has arranged the following order of events, subject, of course, to the approval of the association:

100 yards dash, ¼-mile bicycle race, 220 yards dash, putting the shot, one mile bicycle race, running high jump, three-legged race, pole vault, 440 yards run, two mile bicycle race, and ½-mile relay run.

The events are all to be handicapped and the committee has chosen T. A. Cuming, C. B. Morse and S. C. Crane as the handicappers.

The feature of the day will be the relay race, which is open to teams of three men from each class. One man from each class is to run one-sixth of a mile and then hand a pennant or banner that he carries to the next man on his team, who is to run the same distance and pass the pennant on to the last man. The first pennant to cross the line will be that of the winning class.

There will be a medal for the all-round championship, and some form of trophy for the class scoring the most points. The points will count 5 for first, 3 for second, and 1 for third in all, including the relay race, when the points will count only in the class contest.

The committee which has charge of the field day is as follows: Wilbur F. Cornwell, chairman; Charles Dolliver, Charles Noble, Henry Eggerding and Herbert Richardson.

Their report will come before a meeting of the association on Tuesday afternoon.

A Wonderful House.

What promises to be the most handsomely interior decorated house in this city is just receiving the finishing touches to its beauty. It is the residence of Abner Bartlett on Westervelt avenue, and the entire house has been repapered and painted. The parlor is especially beautiful, furniture, interior decorations and all are white and gold. The piano is also to be in those two colors. The painting has been done by Chamberlain while William Mullon, of Park avenue, did the gilding. The effect will be very fine when the improvements are all completed.

The Faculty.

The faculty for the Plainfield Business College is announced as follows:

Rev. A. A. Phelps, A. M., President and lecturer on business ethics, political economy, and English criticism.

Prof. E. E. Ferris, principal of the commercial course and instructor of English branches

Prof. R. M. Wade, principal of the shorthand course and instructor in English branches.

Craig A. Marsh, A. M., L. L. B., lecturer in commercial law.

The public opening of the school takes place on Monday.

What Is He?

A young man, wearing a brown derby and dark suit, has been lounging around the corner of Washington and East Sixth streets for several days. He walks up and down East Sixth street and appears again during the evening. He has been seen to watch the houses in that neighborhood at the rather early hour of two o'clock in the morning. The young man is apparently a stranger to the town but he is well dressed and seems to be watching for someone. His continued stay has greatly annoyed some of the gentler sex who are afraid that he is insane.

A Surprise Party.

A surprise party was given to A. P. Drew at his home in Washingtonville last night by about fifty of his friends who enjoyed themselves in a very pleasant manner. Dancing was the principal pleasure of the evening. Refreshments were served at midnight. Guests were present from Washingtonville, Plainfield and New York.

Scotch Plains Hotel Sold.

Thomas Paff has sold his Scotch Plains hotel property to J. H. Blimm, formerly of this city, but now of New York, who will take possession next month. Mr. Paff will devote his time to the real-estate business.

—The candidates for the Leal's school football team practiced all yesterday afternoon.

F. A. BARNABY HURT.

Thrown From a Wagon and Quite Badly Injured.

Just as F. A. Barnaby, of Plainfield avenue, got in his runabout at his home this morning to go to South Plainfield where he was to take the train for New York, his horse became frightened and ran away. Mr. Barnaby was thrown from the wagon into the street and received injuries, the extent of which Drs. Hedges and Endicott have not yet been able to determine. However, it is thought that his shoulder is dislocated. The horse is very young, and has a nervous temperament, which accounts for the accident.

The wagon was completely wrecked and the horse was caught at South Plainfield and returned to the owner.

Mr. Barnaby was assisted to his home by his groom where he is getting along as well as can be expected.

R. McCloskey, who lately arrived in New York from Ireland, purchased an emigrant ticket in New York yesterday for Philadelphia. Through his ignorance he boarded one of the fast line trains. The conductor did not discover the mistake until too late. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

A TRIP OF THE MIND.

Rev. Mr. O'Donnell Carries an Audience Over Europe in an Interesting Way.

Those who were fortunate enough to be present at the Monroe Avenue chapel last evening, will always remember with pleasure the very interesting talk given by the pastor, Rev. Mr. O'Donnell, on his European trip this summer.

The affair was in charge of the Young Men's Associatien of the chapel, and Blanchard Randolph, the president, was master of ceremonies. After William Runyon, George O. Stevens, and Blanchard Randolph had pleased the audience with the excellent rendition of the "Star Spangled Banner" Mr. O'Donnell spoke in part as follows:

I am glad of this privilege to tell you something tonight of my trip, for travel elevates both mind and body. Let me say at the start that you will never find a better country than the one you are now living in. It was in June that the French liner La Normandie sailed out of the harbor and down the North River. It was a beautiful morning. During the night it had rained and everything seemed to glisten in the glorious sunlight. Even Liberty waved a bon voyage. At noon we were ninety miles out, and in a short time the clouds began to lower, fog settled around us and the incessant blowing of the fog horn kept us in good humor. Let me say that if you have sunshine in your soul you can be happy anywhere. We arrived at Havre on June 30th, and at once began our travels.

Mr. O'Donnell then gave a graphic sketch of the many points of interest visited in the old country.

When about half through his talk he left his audience among the ruins of Pompeii, while William Runyon and George O. Stevens gave a delightful duett.

Mr. O'Donnell then proceeded to bring his audience home again. He spoke of a visit to Heidelberg, where he saw a cask which holds 60,000 gallons of rum, which he thought was enough for any ordinary man.

In speaking of the Rhine, he said he was very much disappointed and thought that instead of the Hudson river being called the Rhine of America, it would be a compliment to call the Rhine the Hudson of Germany.

After touching a few additional points of interest the audience were brought home in safety, and well pleased with their imaginery trip.

At the close William Runyon and George O. Stevens rendered another duett and the former sang a solo.

The Choral Society.

The society will begin rehearsals for the season of 1895-'96 about the middle of October, of which due notice will be giuen to the chorus. As applications for membership are coming in, the secretary requests any member of the chorus who shall be unable to continue as an active member to so inform him, at an early day, in order that vacancies may be filled without delay. Applications for membership should be sent to the secretary at once, so that the voices may be tried by the conductor in time to enable the accepted applicants to begin practice at the first rehearsal. Due notice will be sent to applicants of time and place for such examination.

CRANFORD WILL NOT PLAY.

THE FOOTBALL LEAGUE WILL BE COMPOSED OF THREE TEAMS.

Think That the Other Towns Will Be Too Strong for Them—Dunellen Has Some Kicks to Make—Next Meeting Here.

From present prospects the Central New Jersey Football League will consist of a trio of clubs instead of the four that originally joined, as it is generally understood that Cranford will be unable to put an eleven on the field of sufficient strength to cope with the other teams of the league.

The advisory committee met at the Westfield Y. M. C. A. building at the call of President E. G. Wherry. President E. G. Wherry, J. Voight and a representative in the place of Robert Wherry were present from the Westfield association, Secretary Charles B. Morse was the Plainfield delegate and George W. Richardson the only Dunellen man. The verbal proxies of the last two were accepted and they were allowed to vote for their absent friends.

Cranford was not represented at the meeting and several of the members of the committee had heard that a team could not be organized as the players there refused to play in the league against the supposed heavy teams of Westfield and Plainfield. The question was discussed to some length, but no action was taken except to notify Cranford of their neglect to send their committee and to enquire if they really meant to leave the league.

The Dunellen association had several grievances to bring up which their manager and captain, Mr. Richardson, presented to the league.

It was simply impossible, he said, to organize a team in Dunellen and New Market alone, as every available player had been gotten out to practice, and only five of them would play. His proposition was that the limit of the territory, from which he might draw his material, be extended to within Piscataway township, the only towns in which are New Market and Dunellen. With this change he said that a team could be organized, otherwise Dunellen would have to withdraw from the League.

The Westfield delegation had been instructed to vote against any such change, although personally they favored it. But the combined votes of Dunellen and Plainfield carried the point.

Mr. Richardson next brought up the question of Coach Darling playing on the Dunellen team, but the idea was immediately sat upon by the other members of the committee.

The last of Dunellen's little kicks was next brought up and that was that the time of the halves be shortened. Mr. Richardson suggested twenty-five minutes, but the Westfield committee had been instructed to vote for thirty minutes. It was finally decided to vote on the question by mail.

The meeting then adjourned until next Friday evening at 7:45 at the Plainfield Y. M. C. A. building, when Cranford's answer will be acted upon.

Detectives Here Again.

There must be something about the Plainfield letter carriers that is very attractive. Sometime ago the postal authorities sent men to Plainfield to watch them, and for the past two weeks another set of men have been in the city following the carriers very closely in their rounds. People are beginning to think that the subject is an interesting one.

When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

IN A STATE OF SIEGE

Baracoa Threatened with Extinction by Rebels.

Many Residents Have Already Fled to Havana—Insurgent Camp Captured—Spanish Recruits Dying—Cost of the Army—$50,000 a Month for Quinine Alone.

Santiago de Cuba, Sept. 18, via Key West, Fla., Sept. 28.—Official reports from Guantanamo say that on Monday the 16th, a Spanish column attacked the rebel camp Piedra, between the Felicidiad and Rio Sew, occupied by 800 insurgents under leader Gil, and killed eight rebels before driving them from their position. Three Spanish soldiers were wounded and when the Spanish took possession of the rebel camp they found several explosive shells buried, but they were dug up before any damage occurred.

Baracoa Besieged by Rebels.

From Baracoa comes reports showing that city to be in a state of siege and threatened with extinction. The insurgents do not allow anything to enter the city from the outlying districts and if the city is not burned out its inhabitants stand a good chance of being starved out. On the 14th the rebels broke the aqueduct and burned the costly elevators which were recently built. Many business men with their families have left Baracoa and come here to stay. One of them reports a dastardly double murder on the streets of Baracoa a few days ago. A soldier loaded his gun and without any known cause deliberately fired at a corporal, killing him instantly. Another soldier who was with the corporal was also shot and killed.

Recent Recruits Dead and Dying.

The recent recruits from Spain are not likely to be of any material benefit to the authorities. Of those who arrived a few days ago many have died and numerous others are in the hospitals. Six succumbed to yellow fever within twenty-four hours of their landing here. Those of the recruits who are yet able to move about the streets are, because of their uncleanliness and drinking habits, likely to be in hospitals or graves within a short time.

False Rumor of Jose Maceo's Death.

It is reported here that Antonio Maceo is moving toward the Villas with 6,000 cavalrymen. Another rumor is to the effect that Jose Maceo is dead of heart disease, but the report is not credited. The government is very silent in the matter whereas if the report were true it would be published officially with much rejoicing.

Campos' Peace Policy Approved.

Cable advices from Madrid are to the effect that at an early date the government will make an official statement regarding the revolution in Cuba. It is affirmed that at the latest it will terminate in May next. On the 16th inst. the ministry in Madrid agreed on a policy with that end in view, and, if necessary, the troops now in Cuba will be reinforced by 200,000 men. Colonel Carreo of Madrid says that the moderate policy represented by Martinez Campos inspires all with greater confidence than the "policy of extermination recommended by badly advised people."

Cost of the Army.

The Madrid newspaper, El Imparcial, in referring to the cost of the army in Cuba, fixes present expenses at $1,500,000 per month, adding that when the active campaign begins in the dry season with nine brigades (November to May) the monthly expenses will be $3,000,000. At present the outlay for quinine alone, for the troops, is $50,000 monthly.

A REBEL SYMPATHIZER.

Florida's Governor Says We Should Accord Them Belligerent Rights.

Jacksonville, Fla., Sept. 28.—A special from Tallahassee, Fla., says: Governor Henry L. Mitchell is in hearty sympathy with the Cuban's struggle for liberty. Replying to a question from a reporter last evening he said he thought the United States government should recognize Cuba's effort to throw off the yoke of Spain's bondage and accord to her all the rights of a belligerent. He thinks that congress will do this when it meets, if such action is not taken before.

New York, Sept. 28.—Citizen George Francis Train yesterday received from W. N. Bethik, secretary to Li Hung Chang, a copy of the officially revised history of the peace negotiations, documentary and verbal, between China and Japan. The history was thirty days in reaching here from Tien Tsin. It contains the text of the treaty interviews between Prince Ito and Li Hung Chang and a portrait of the latter taken at Tien Tsin, July 18, after his return from Japan. In the portrait the mark of the bullet which was fired at Li Hung Chang, by a Japanese who attempted to murder him, is distinctly seen under the left eye.

COFFINS FILLED WITH BRICKS.

Bodies of Patients of a Female Hospital Sold to Medical Colleges.

St. Louis, Sept. 28.—Maggie Dalton, the alleged servant girl thief, has made a statement to the police concerning the recent management of the female hospital, the details of which are so shocking as to be almost incredible. The girl gives the names of four attaches of the hospital at the time Dr. R. M. Kesley was superintendent and accuses them of having made a practice of selling the bodies of patients who died in the institution. Coffins filled with bricks, she says, were palmed off on the man who buried the dead and the bodies were shipped away from the city to various medical colleges.

NOT TO TRY FOR THE CUP.

Valkyrie Held Here for Trial with Distant Shore.

New York, Sept. 28.—It is absolutely denied by those in authority that Lord Dunraven has any intention of again competing for the America's cup. A representative of Dunraven sent to London yesterday to a leading English paper the following cable: "No intention Valkyrie again racing for America's cup. Outside trials alone required." Unless Valkyrie defeats Distant Shore in the trials and the New York Yacht club rescinds several of its rules there is no chance of Valkyrie again racing for the trophy, at least next season.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK

Some of the Striking Trade Features of the Week.

Increased Demand for Money at the East and West, Continued Active Demand for Iron and Steel and Further Upward Tendency of Prices—Bank Clearings Heavy.

New York, Sept. 28.—Striking features of the week are increased demand for money east and west, the maintenance of the widespread and active demand for iron and steel, and the further upward movement of the price of raw cotton, together with advances in quotations for wheat-flour, wheat and wool, says Bradstreet in their weekly review of the state of trade issued to-day. Sudden changes in the weather affecting a wide expanse of territory have made general trade irregular, but reports from those sections unfavorably affected are in part offset by the stimulation of demand for certain staples in other portions of the country. The improved demand for funds continues a feature of the money market at Boston, New York, Chicago, St. Louis and at minor centers. Inquiry among bakers at the cities referred to reveals a better demand for all classes of mercantile borrowers.

Bank Clearings.

Bank clearings throughout the United States aggregate $998,000,000 this week, 8 per cent. less than last week, but 21 per cent. larger than in the last week of September, 1894, and 30 per cent. larger than in the corresponding week of 1893. Contrasted with the corresponding total in 1892, a year of large volume of business, the current week's transactions, as indicated by the bank clearings total, show a decrease of 16 per cent.

Changes in Prices.

The general tendency of the price movement is the reverse of that shown in several previous weeks. Live stock at western markets has been in very liberal receipt, and prices are low and weak. Indian corn and pork are also lower, with a downward tendency. Prices have remained firm and unchanged for iron and steel, oats, lard, coffee and leather, while the upward movement, in addition to items specified, includes sugar, print cloths, petroleum, turpentine, anthracite coal and Havana leaf tobacco. The latter is advanced on demand in expectation that the war in Cuba will curtail supplies in the near future. Trade in lightweight woolens is unsatisfactory, and owing to the high price and strength of cotton, caution is being exercised in buying cotton goods.

Mercantile Failures.

There were 9,299 mercantile failures in the United States during the past nine months, only forty-eight more than in the like portion of last year, which coincidence is paralleled by the total amounts of assets and liabilities of failing traders this year being substantially the same as in the like period one year ago. The feature of the failure record for the nine months lies in the relatively large number reported in the first quarter of the year, since which time totals have fallen off from week to week very sharply. Business failures in New England have decreased notably as compared with a year ago, while those at the south have increased about as much. There are more failures reported from western states this year than last, while in the northwest and on the Pacific coast there are fewer.

MORA'S MONEY READY

Spain's Draft Promptly Paid in London.

The Cash Now in the New York Sub-Treasury Subject to Secretary Olney's Order—Considerable Trouble Expected in Distributing the Claimants' 40 Per Cent.

Washington, Sept. 28.—The Mora draft has been paid and the money is now subject to the order of Secretary Olney. Two weeks ago, on Saturday, September 14, the Spanish minister, Dupuy de Lome, gave the draft on the Spanish finance agent in London to Acting Secretary of State Adee, the time for its delivery, according to the demands made by Secretary Olney, expiring September 15, which date happened to fall on Sunday. Secretrry Olney returned from his vacation the following Monday and took charge of the case. The secretary, it is understood, forwarded the draft to New York for transmission to London on the first steamer, and the prompt way in which it was paid shows there has been no attempt at diplomatic delay in settling up the account. A cable message to the secretary announced that the draft was paid yesterday and the net proceeds ($1,449,000 in gold) placed to the credit of the secretary of state in the sub-treasury of the United States at New York.

Distribution of the Money Difficult.

It now remains for the secretary to distribute the sum among the persons interested and this seems to be a task of some difficulty, owing to the many assignments of claims that have been made. Extending over a period of twenty-five years, and having passed through the hands of numerous attorneys it is to be expected that there would be more or less of a conflict between claimants. Just what the secretary will do has not yet been determined. Two expert clerks have been at work some time docketing these assignments and getting them in shape, and their task is not completed by any means. When all the known assignments have been arranged the department will still be unable to say that no more exist. Meanwhile one suit in injunction has been begun and others are threatened. It has been suggested that inasmuch as all these conflicting assignments grow out of the 40 per cent. set apart for attorneys' fees and other expenses there is no reason why Mora, who gets the remaining 60 per cent., and who is the chief beneficiary, should not be promptly paid his share, although he might be required to give an indemnity bond. This is merely a suggestion, however, and may be ignored entirely by the secretary.

Claimants May Meet.

With the threat of suits impending a prominent official this morning made another suggestion, which was that an invitation be sent to all claimants to meet in conference and settle their claims amicably.

FOURTH RACE PROTESTED.

Spruce IV. Objects To Awarding Victory to the American Yacht.

Center Island, L. I., Sept. 28.—The fourth race of the Seawanhaka's international challenge series for small raters which was sailed in a tumbly sea in the open sound with a rattling northwest wind of fifteen knots' strength, resulted in a handsome victory for the American defender Ethelwynn by one minute and ten seconds, official time, at the end of the twelve-mile triangle. When the Ethelwynn reached the second mark of four miles and was two minutes and ten seconds behind, Mr. Brand on Spruce waived a protest flag. The committee on flagship Oneida responded and at the conclusion of the race Mr. Brand's formal protest was received. He claimed that his competitor had infringed sections three and seven of rule thirty-four of the Seawanhaka club's racing regulations, which are as follows: Rule 34, section 3—When both yachts are close-hauled, or both free, or both have the wind aft and have the wind on opposite sides, the yacht with the wind on the port side shall keep clear. Section 7.—Definition of an overlap. An over-lap is established when an over-taking yacht has no longer a free choice on which she will pass, and continues to exist as long as the leward yacht by luffing or the weather yacht by bearing away is in danger of fouling. The regatta committee will make their decision known to-day.

WAR AGAINST PRIZE FIGHTING.

Populists May Defeat the Plans of the Governor of Texas.

Austin, Tex., Sept. 28.—The proclamation issued by Gov. Culberson convening a special session of the legislature next Tuesday to pass another law against prize-fighting is the popular topic to-day. It is said that populists and other political opponents of the governor may defeat his plans by enacting a law to go into effect in ninety days. Representative Ward said that the legislature undoubtedly would pass a law to go into effect immediately and that it would make prize fighting a felony. He thinks the law will be passed within a week after the legislature meets.

LOWEST SINCE APRIL

Condition of the Treasury Gold Reserve To-day.

Exports, Which Have Amounted to More Than $32,000,000 Since July, Were Chiefly Legitimate with Only a Tinge of Speculative Motives Apparent.

Washington, Sept. 28.—The treasury gold reserve has been reduced to $92,705,067, at which figures it stood when the treasury opened its doors to-day. These figures were reached by the withdrawal yesterday at New York for export of $1,500,000. Since the present export gold movement began on July 13 last there have been withdrawn from the United States treasury $32,450,000 in gold, all of which, with the exception of less than a million dollars, has been sent to Europe. The total gold exported exceeds these figures as some gold, especially the gold bullion exported, was furnished by the banks of New York. During the same period gold was furnished by the syndicate and by the New York national banks and others to the amount of $15,325,000.

Lowest Since April 30 Last.

The figures to which the treasury gold reserve have now been reduced by incessant exports are lower than since April 30 last, on which date they are stated at $91,247,143; under the syndicate agreement gold was then being paid into the treasury and from that date the reserve increased up to June 29, when it attained its maximum height this year, standing at $107,512,862. From that time the gold reserve has gradually declined until to-day's figures were reached.

Expect Aid From Banks.

Treasury officials decline to discuss the prospects of further gold shipments, as the situation is very much mixed. The present movement appears to consist chiefly of legitimate exports with not much more than a tinge of speculative motives apparent. No uneasiness and no anticipations of any emergency arising sufficient to make necessary another bond issue are entertained in well informed treasury circles. While no official information can be obtained on the subject, the belief is entertained that the national banks of New York may come further to the relief of the treasury next week and strengthen the gold reserve by $10,000,000 or so.

The Situation Very Uncertain.

Government officials are encouraged to believe that within a month the number of commerical bills that will be on the market as a result of the export of American cereals and cotton will turn the tide of exchange and stop gold exports for some time to come. The situation, however, is so kaleidoscopic that no one here whose opinion is worth quoting will express an opinion for publication.

TO DEFEAT THE BEEF TRUST.

Cattle for Grazing and Slaughter To Be Admitted from Mexico.

Washington, Sept. 28.—An order has been issued my Secretary Morton authorizing the free admission into the United States of cattle from Mexico for grazing and immediate slaughter from and after October 22 proximo. Mexican cattle have been usually admitted in November, and Secretary Morton's action in advancing the date this year to October, is said to be due to his purpose to defeat as far as possible the cattle and dressed beef combine in its efforts to artificially maintain high prices.

The Republican leaders in New York city have declared in favor of a straight ticket.

For the blues, get out of them: go for a walk; visit a friend; get out your music; help somebody worse off than you; think what good you can do at home and outside, and—stop thinking about yourself.—Somerset Democrat.

Judge Howard Carrow, of Camden, permanent chairman of the Democratic Gubernatorial convention has appointed the following gentlemen to notify Chancellor McGill of his nomination for Governor: Augustus W. Cutler, Isaac W. Carmichael, John H. Dialogue, Charles E. Hendrickson, James M. Van Valen. Frederick A. Marsh, Phillip P. Baker, Rufus Blodgett, Thomas Kay, William B. Gourley, Peter Hauck, Elvin W. Crane, Johnston Cornish, J. Newton Voorhees, Millard F. Ross, George O. Vanderbilt, Bowman H. Cox, Albert Slape, Charles E. Nichols, John F. Hall, Matthew H. Vanderveer—one from each county.

The Elizabeth "Journal" is still discouraged as to the outcome of the present canvass, and warns its party that while "the chances of victory are in their favor, they have work to do to win it." This is a very different tune from that which the Republican organs have been singing for the past six months or more, but it is just what the public have believed all the time. More than that, the public have noticed for some time that the Republicans have been whistling to keep up their courage, which for the last two or three weeks has been rapidly oozing out as the political situation gradually dawned upon them. The signs of success for the Democratic party at the ensuing election are growing brighter from day to day.—Trenton True American.

THEATRICAL.

"Girl Wanted," is the latest farce-comedy enterprise of Managers Davis & Keogh. It is presented by a strong company of merrymakers with Frank Bush at the head. R. N. Stephens, the author of the piece had Mr. Bush in mind when he wrote it. He gave Mr. Bush a part in which the comedian could display his charming versatility as an impersonator of different kinds of comic characters. The part taken by Mr. Bush is that of a comedian who finds it to his advantage to disguise himself as several other people. In the course of the play he represents different races and both sexes. No more exuberant fun-maker exists than Frank Bush. But the fun of the piece does not depend on him alone. There are a dozen other characters all amusing and each distinctly drawn. There are specialties in every act of the piece. The first has it scene in a New York, the second in a restaurant, the third in a roof-garden. In the way of fun of the gayest type, "Girl Wanted" is said to possess just what its title expresses. At Music Hall tonight.

FOR RHEUMATISM!

Paine's Celery Compound a Sure Specific.

No Well-Informed Person Suffers From It.

The Disease No Longer An Incurable One.

Greatest of All Remedies Prescribed by Doctors.

A Long, Brilliant Record of Remarkable Cures.

Neuralgia and rheumatism—two disorders no longer incurable. Physicians today get rid of rheumatism and neuralgia, as they do sleeplessness, melancholy, hysteria and other results of nervous exhaustion, by building up the system and supporting its delicate nerve parts by the use of Paine's celery compound.

Paine's celery compound attacks the disease by getting the system back to its properly nourised condition. It stands alone in the history of medicine. It is a certain specific for the cure, not only of rheumatism, but also of all diseases due to impoverished nerves and blood.

The close connection of well-fed nerves and brain with health, is the solid rock upon which Paine's celery compound stands. The thousands of men and women all over the country who have been cured of rheumatism once and for all by Paine's celery compound, have made good all that the medical fraternity first predicted for it.

That it restores health and strength to the body made weary, listless and despondent from nervous debility, needs no proof today in thousands of homes.

The list of those it has freed from rheumatism is a long one. It contains a host of well-known men and women at home and abroad. Every city and town in the United States and Canada is represented.

Paine's celery compound was first prepared by Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth College. Ever since its first appearance it has been the one recognized nerve and brain invigorator among medical men Its constant use by physicians, where an active nutriment is urgently needed, speaks volumes for its efficacy in diseases of nervous origin.

Strength, buoyant spirits and freedom from pain comes with its use.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

AN IMPROVED ZITHER.

J. Van Eps Has Just Finished an Elegant Instrument.

Plainfield has among its many citizens one who is known to the musical world as the best zither maker in all this region. The man is J. Van Eps, of Park avenue, and he has just completed a zither, after five months toil, that promises to be a masterpiece. It has five new improvements that no other instrument has, and is perfect in design and finish. It is constructed to stand a strain of 1,500 pounds, and has a capacity of five octaves. The principle on which it is built is known to no one but Mr. Van Eps. The tone is clear and rich, and almost equals the piano in power.

In the hands of such a skillful player as Mr. Van Eps the instrument fairly speaks, and promises to take a prominent place in the latest improved musical instruments.

CHANCELLOR KENT.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF THE AUSHOR OF "KENT'S COMMENTARIES."

Revisited It When Old. And Insisted Upon Finding a Mouse Hole Which He Watched When a Boy. His Very Eventful Career.

Mr. James Kent, the great expounder of American law, was the son of Moses Kent and grandson of the Rev. Elisha Kent, and was born in what is now the village of Doanesburg in the town of Southeast, Putnam county, N. Y., July 31, 1763. This region of the country was a part of the great patent granted to Adolph Philipse, in 1697, and Moses Kent, the father of the learned Chancellor, held a farm on a perpetual lease from the Philipse family.

His grandfather, the Rev. Elisha Kent, came from Suffield, Conn., where he was born in 1703. He was for many years the pastor of the church in Southeast, and a very modest tombstone in a burying ground at Doanesburg, not far from the church which was the scene of his earthly labors, bears this inscription:

"In memory of Rev. Elisha Kent, who died in July, 1776, in the seventy-third year of his age. Blessed are the dead who died in the Lord."

Moss Kent, the father of the Chancellor, died in 1794. He had four sisters, one of whom married John Kane, and was the great grandmother of Dr. Elisha Kent Kane, the famous Arctic explorer.

The boyhood of the Chancellor was spent on his father's farm, near the east branch of Croton River, and to the day of his death the great lawyer felt the deepest interest in that romantic region where he had passed so many days. When an old man he made a visit to his birthplace in company with Dr. Daniel Reed, who describes the following scene:

"The first thing the Chancellor did after entering the house was to go to a certain room and say:

"'I want to crawl under the bed and put my hand in a mouse hole where Brother Moss and I amused ourselves in watching for a mouse when we were boys.'

"And suiting the action to the word down dropped the learned and dignified Chancellor of New York, and not without difficulty accomplished the feat that had pleased his boyish heart long years before."

In 1773 the future judge was sent to a Latin school in Danbury, and entered Yale college in 1777. Owing to the invasion of the British troops in 1779 the college was broken up and the students dispersed. At that time he met with a copy of "Blackstone's Commentaries," which so excited his admiration that he resolved to be a lawyer, and after studying under the famous Judge Egbert Benson was admitted to the bar in 1785. He first began practice in Poughkeepsie, but a few years later removed to New York, where he found a field worthy of his great talent. In succession he held the offices of Master in Chancery, member of Legislature and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

In 1814 he was appointed Chancellor and his various and learned decisions have given a lasting honor to his name. After retiring from office he commenced the great work which has given him a deathless fame.

In 1828 appeared the first volume of his "Commentaries on American Law." It is enough to say of this great work that until the present system of things shall be succeeded either by a higher law or utter lawlessness, "Kent's Commentaries" must be the source from which the student will derive his first knowledge of law, and what Blackstone was to England Chancellor Kent has been to America.

Chancellor Kent, after a long life of honor and usefulness, died at his residence, on Union Square, New York, December 12, 1847. His remains rest in the cemetery at Fishkill by the side of his only son. It is no injustice to the dead. It is no disparagement to the living, to say that James Kent was the most distinguished lawyer born within the limits of the Empire State, and of his greatness and his fame his native town, his native county and his native State may well be proud.

Sam Gregory and the Swordfish.

The schooner Abden Keene, Captain Edward Doughty, arrived yesterday from a swordfishing cruise, bringing a good quantity of fish. From the crew was learned a very interesting story of an exciting adventure by one of the crew with a giant swordfish, by which Samuel Gregory nearly lost his life.

The Keene had been out three days and was off the South Shore lightship, Nantucket, when a large swordfish was speared. As is the custom, Sam Gregory was sent off in a dory to capture the prize. He got along very well in his efforts for a time, when suddenly the fish became wild and made the water white with foam, as he thrust madly at the boat.

Several thrusts were made, but at last with a terrific blow the giant fish stabbed the boat full and fair on her quarter. It was a terrific blow, and Gregory was thrown several feet into the air and overboard, the sword just missing his leg as it pierced the boat. Gregory cannot swim, and thought his last days had come. But the fish gave a powerful lunge and broke his sword short off and left fourteen inches of it sticking in the boat's bottom. Luckily the movements of the fish pushed the boat toward Gregory, who was struggling in the water, and he managed to scramble in again. It would seem as if he had seen enough of swordfishing for one day, but his fisherman instinct was strong, and in an hour's time he had his marine assassin safely landed.

It was a narrow escape for Gregory. He carries a big scar on his side now from a wound received from a swordfish some years ago.—Portland Daily Press.

BAPTIZED IN CHAINS.

The Sins of Two Condemned Murderers Washed Away in the Big Muddy.

There was a baptism by immersion in the Big Muddy, near Murphysboro, Ill. It was such a novel one that thousands of people were there to see it. There were only two candidates, but they were in chains, and the solemn ceremonies were conducted in the presence of an armed guard in command of the sheriff. The two repentant sinners seeking for forgiveness were Jeffrey and Henderson, convicted of murder.

The men professed repentance and their request to be baptized was granted by the sheriff.

About 4,000 people were at the river bank. Women in their Sunday clothes, men in carriages, in wagons, and on horseback, and in canoes in midstream, and scores of children. A crowd of mechanics, clerks, preachers, business men and laborers, on a few minutes' notice, gathered to see what condemned men recently converted would say and do.

The people had gathered at the upper ford, but the sheriff and his posse, with his converts in a carriage, drove to the lower ford 200 yards below. As a section of the crowd on the far side of the river rushed scattering along the side to the lower place, a war veteran said: "Look, there is a very good picture of how we appeared in the charge at Mission Ridge."

The prisoners were driven to midstream. There were two sets of shackles, one on their feet and one set chaining their feet to each other. The Rev. Mr. McBride and the Rev. Mr. Bagwell, Baptist evangelists, waded out in the stream, while the Rev. Mr. Gordon and his choir sang a hymn on shore. Vehicles and horsemen crowded the sheriff's carriage in the river.

Jeffrey's wife first stepped from the carriage into the stream and was baptized. Then Jeffrey and Henderson, in clanking chains, but with cleanly shaved faces and serene countenances, stepped in and knelt. One preacher took hold of the shackled man, and in a loud voice said:

"Upon profession of thy faith, my brethren, and in obedience to the command of my heavenly father, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost."

Both converts went under and came up together. Then, still in chains, they crawled into their carriage between the officers and were hurriedly driven back to their quarters in jail. They spoke no word during the ceremony except to the ministers. The spectators stood by in silence. The sheriff stood on the carriage front, surrounded by a well armed posse.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

SURVIVORS OF THE COMMUNE.

All Paris Trembles at Each Recurring Anniversary.

Each year something happens to remind the Paris public of the bloody days of the Commune in 1871. On the 24th and 25th of May—the anniversary of its fall—the police are all afield to prevent manifestations with the red flag at the foot of the wall in the cemetery of Pere-Lachaise. There the last Communist soldiers, shot down by the National troops under General de Galliffet, lie buried in deep trenches. On the same days religious people wander undisturbed in the quiet garden of the Rue Haxo. There the Communist leaders exercised their last act of authority by shooting, before their own turn came, the hostages who were in their power—priests, civil officers and National soldiers.

After twenty-four years the Commune has become sober and respectable. Its survivors have made their way everywhere, since the amnesty of 1878 allowed them to return to France. The revolutionary Socialist party, with its forty members of Parliament, celebrates the anniversary after the approved fashion of politicians. A few months ago, when one of their number had to be disciplined by the President of the Legislative Chamber, they rose in a body to the cry of "Vive la Commune!" Ordinary mortals had a moment of painful surprise. Jean Volders, the leader of the Belgian Socialists, just before he became crazy, explained with authority what his comrades meant by profession of solidarity with the Commune: "'Vive la Commune!' is the war cry of the Socialists of all nations, just as the Marseillaise is the hymn of the social revolution. All those who march behind the red flag, whatever their race or language, sing it as their hymn of deliverance."

A Diamond in a Floating Bottle.

While fishermen were hauling a net for shad in the upper Delaware, near Lambertville, N. J., they took a sealed bottle, with a long, narrow silk ribbon about the neck. In the bottle was this note:

"This bottle was started from Dingman's Ferry, Pa. Will the finder communicate with one of the undersigned, stating when and where found. Ann H., Gertrude G. and Emily L., April 15, 1895."

The fishermen were about to cast the bottle aside when one of them discovered something bright and sparkling in the bottle. It proved to be a diamond, which has since been found to be worth $100. It is supposed in placing the note in the bottle one of the young women dropped the precious stone from a ring she wore.

He Was Sorry.

A woman who lives near Dupont Circle having punished her little boy, said to him:

"Rudolph, aren't you sorry now?"

"Yes," replied the boy, "I am—sorry that you spanked me."—Washington Post.

Transported.

"Well," said the monkey to the organ grinder, as he sat on top of the organ. "I'm simply carried away with the music."—Philadelphia Record.

THE MONOTONY OF DUPLICATION.

In the Italian Style Additions Can be Made at Any Time.

(Copyright 1895 by the Co-operative Building Plan Association, N. Y.)

Diversified as are the features of this country in climate, soil, surface and exposure, no one style of architecture can be adapted to suit all conditions. The Swiss chalet was best suited for the mountain passes, the Swiss cottage for the valley, the Gothic structure for the rugged hillside and the Colonial mansion for the city, and to these must be added the Italian villa for the woody slope.

A leading advantage of the Italian style is that an addition can readily be made at any time, and often with great improvement on the original structure. This is a strong point considered with reference to American building. Hundreds of persons of moderate fortune desire to improve their residences at a future period, and by adopting a design of this style a little forethought leaves everything in a favorable state for additions, yet giving at the same time an appearance of present completeness.

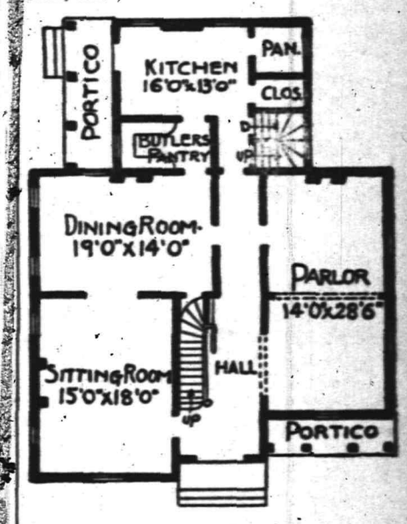
While there are natural conditions that point to the adoption of some particular style in a neighborhood, it is not a good policy to have a number of houses of the same design adjoining, or indeed to repeat a design at all in the same place.

A general description of the design illustrating this article is here given:

Dimensions: Width, 40 ft.; depth, 54 ft.

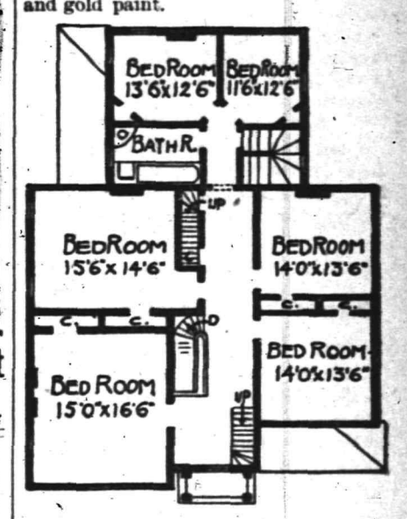
Heights of stories: Cellar, 7 ft. 6 in.; first story, 10 ft.; second story, 9 ft. 6 in.

Exterior materials: Foundation, brick; first and second stories, clapboards; roof, tin.



FIRST FLOOR

Interior finish: Three-coat plaster, sand finished, tinted colors to suit owner, in halls, dining and sitting rooms; elsewhere hard white finish. Plaster centers and cornices in hall, parlor, dining and sitting rooms and large front bedroom. Main staircase, oak. Dining room and hall floor, also trim, oak. Elsewhere flooring and trim of soft wood. Bathroom and kitchen wainscoted. Panel backs and picture molding in principal rooms of first story; chair rail in dining room. All interior woodwork, with exception of parlor grain filled and finished natural with hard oil varnish. Parlor trim, white and gold paint.



SECOND FLOOR

Colors: Trim, including cornices, casings, etc., cream white; clapboards, pearl gray; roofs, red; sashes, dark green; outside doors and brickwork, oiled.

Accommodations: The principal rooms and their sizes, closets, etc., are shown by the floor plans. Cellar under whole house with inside and outside entrances and concrete floor. Wide portierre openings connect dining room and sitting room.

In the vicinity of New York this design as described, not including mantels, range or heater, would cost a little short of $7,500, though in many sections of the country where labor is cheaper it could be bought for 10, 15, or perhaps 20 per cent. less.

And now his gladdened eyes
Can almost read his title clear
To mansions in the skies.

My son was afflicted with catarrh; I induced him to try Ely's Cream Balm and the disagreeable catarrhal smell all left him. He appears as well as any one. J. C. Olmstead, Arcola, Ill.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at L. W Randolph's drug store.

DR. GREENE'S NERVURA

Alderman John Dever Advises Use of This Grand Medicine.

Boston's Popular City Official Says Dr. Greene's Nervura Makes You Strong and Well---The Best Medicine You Can Possibly Take.

BOSTON'S POPULAR ALDERMAN HON. JOHN F. DEVER.

The most popular and widely-known official in Boston's City Government is Alderman John F. Dever. A prominent leader of his political party, he is essentially a public man, and has long served the city of Boston in positions of the highest trust and honor. The word of a man of such public prominence and standing, can be taken by all as the earnest utterances of one who always has the good and well-being of the people at heart.

Hon. Mr. Dever is connected with the New England Piano Co., 200 Tremont street, Boston, Mass. The following letter from Mr. Dever will be read by everybody with the utmost interest, and command the wide-spread attention which the high standing of the writer justifies:

"I was induced to try Dr. Greene's Nervura by a personal friend who has known Dr. Greene as a physician of high standing for many years, and it gives me great pleasure to give to the public my unqualified endorsement of its curative properties as the great nerve and blood remedy.

"It is particularly helpful in neuralgia and rheumatism, and it is the best remedy I know of to tone up and strengthen the nerves and invigorate the blood. When from over-work, or strain upon the brain and nerves, one becomes weak, nervous and sleepless, this grand remedy is, I believe, the best medicine which can be taken. I unhesitatingly recommend its use.

John F. Dever.

Such an unqualified endorsement, and the fact that Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is in fact the very best medicine that can possibly be taken to get well, is information for the people of especial value. Such true and positive information in regard to what is the best and surest remedy to take, to make people well and strong, will be heeded acted upon by all.

This excellent remedy must not be classed with ordinary patent medicines as it is the prescription and discovery of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th street, New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

A CONTEST FOR MEMBERS.

Y. M. C. A. BOYS WILL CHOOSE SIDES AND HUSTLE.

Plans for the Coming Season's Work Discussed by Active Members Saturday Night—Special Classes in All Departments

About fifty of the active members of the Y. M. C. A. met at the association building Saturday evening at 6:30, to partake of the most excellent dinner prepared by Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. Frank Clawson, Mrs. J. H. Manning, and the Misses Demarest. The members were called together to discuss certain topics along the line of association work and to see what could be done to advance the interest. After the inner man had been well taken care of an adjournment was made to the boys game room.

President Murray called the meeting to order and stated the object as above. The first point brought out was in regard to the young men's meetings held Sunday afternoon; how to make them more successful. Mr. Murray stated that during the past year special efforts had been made, and that the same would be done this year. There would be special music, and well known speakers would be secured to conduct the meetings.

In regard to Bible classes the president said that Physical Director D. A. McPhie would teach a class for members of the gymnasium, and he hoped that a large number of these members would be secured for the class. Secretary J. H. Manning would also teach a class, the membership to consist of those who were not in any other class. Mr. Manning said that he had been impressed with the study of the life of Paul, and he would probably take up that line of study. Mr. Murray will have charge of a class, the same to meet some time during the week, which would be convenient to those in it. He said that he had been much interested in the lessons entitled the "Training of the Twelve," and he was very glad to be able to teach the same, which would probably be taken up.

Physical Director D. A. McPhie announced that he would open the gymnasium classes October 1st if it was not too warm. He had also planned to have basket ball every Saturday night in the gymnasium. He also spoke of football, and said that the prospects in this direction were excellent. One member present said he objected to his boy playing the latter game, whereupon Mr. Murray said the man ought to play himself and get used to it.

Joseph Robinson, chairman of the entertainment committee, made a few remarks in regard to the star course for this season, in which he said that he hoped the entertainments would be well attended. They are free to all $5 and $8 members, and for others the course will cost $1.25.

The matter of increasing the membership was then introduced by President Murray, who said that the association needed more members and an effort should be made to secure them. He also said that the Plainfield association had the reputation of being one of the best in the country.

Curtis M. Thorpe, chairman of the membership committee, then called for and presented a novel idea which his committee had decided upon to increase the membership. The plan is to have two leaders, who are D. A. MacPhie and George Cornwell. They are to choose sides from the membership of the association. They are to contest and see which side can secure the largest number of members, and at the end of the contest the ladies are to give a dinner to the contestants, the winning side to eat and the losing side to look on.

D. A. MacPhie's side has adopted red as their color and the application tickets will of that color, while the other side will use the color blue. Mr. Thorpe said that by this method the Dayton, (Ohio) association secured 1,000 members at one time. One member said that he knew of a man who had lived in Plainfield fifteen years and had never been asked to join the association. When asked where he was now, he replied by saying that the man had left town. Another man wanted to know if that would be the result with all who were asked to join.

H. O. Newman made a long statement in regard to increasing the membership. He said that the work should be done personally, and if a member was given the name of a man to see, he should attend to it. He did not think it was hard work to get new members, if good judgment and sense were used. People were accustomed to seeing him come around and they always had their membership money ready for him. Mr. Cornwell stated that he had already secured an application, but Mr. MacPhie said that inasmuch as the contest did not commence till October 1st, that one did not count.

The work of choosing sides was then taken up. John Whiting was made secretary and kept a list of those selected. At the conclusion of this all returned to the small hall where ice-cream was served. Thus was brought to a close one of the best and most helpful meetings ever held by the association.

A vote of thanks was extended to the ladies for their kindness and efforts in making the affair a success.

TOO MUCH CIDER.

Swanson Got Drunk On It and Wanted to Throw Lynch Over the Rink.

Drunk and disorderly was the charge against two men that came before Judge Coddington in the city court this morning. John Swanson was the first to appear. He was arrested yesterday afternoon by Officer Lynch at the corner of East Fifth and Richmond streets. Swanson is a stone-cutter employed by Johnson, and told the Judge that he had only been drinking "cider." But, according to the story of Officer Lynch, the "cider" was rather strong and Swanson went swearing and cursing down the street, disturbing those who were on their way to Sunday-school. When down in front of the old Crescent rink Swanson was going to throw Lynch over it but finally thought better of it. But for the swearing "Yon Yonsen," as the police called him, would have been discharged, as it was he paid a fine of $5 in preference to going to jail for twenty days.

Jim Emmons was the other offender and he was locked up yesterday by Sergeant Kiely for preaching on North avenue and generally disturbing the peace. He was given his choice between a fine of $10 or a visit of thirty days with Sheriff Kyte.

PETER LIVES IN THE BARN.

A Borough Couple Have Hard Work to Live Peaceably.

Peter Brun and his wife, of the borough, have not lived happily together for sometime. Peter says that he is willing to do his share toward making life worth living, but his wife says that he abuses her and makes trouble. This morning she made made complaint to Justice Crosley. The latter saw Peter afterward and asked him what he had been doing. He said that his wife was troublesome and would not live peaceably.

He went by the house yesterday, he said, and she called him hard names.

He is anxious to get the children away from his wife for he does not think they are getting good treatment.

As a result of the trouble, Peter occupies the barn while his wife lives in the house with no prospect of a settlement.

A DAY OF TENNIS.

In Which Miss A. A. Hagan and Ferdinand Dorman are the Victors.

A Nahant tennis tournament in mixed doubles was played on the courts of William Hagan on Prospect avenue on Saturday. The cool weather and the clear sky made the day a very pleasant one and some very fine playing was done by all the players. After a very exciting contest Miss A. A. Hagan and Ferdinand Dorman were awarded the first prizes which consisted of silver and bisque designs. The winners put up an excellent game together. But of the others, Herbert Richardson and J. Hazelwood Craig especially distinguished themselves by their fine playing.

Last of the Season.

The Gesang and Turn Verein Society closed the summer season yesterday by enjoying an outing at Kellar's Grove. The members and their families were present and spent the time socially. Some excellent music was rendered during the afternoon by the singing section. Refreshments were served to all, after which the happy event was brought to a close.

STARTED TO KILL REDSKINS.

BUT ONE DAY OF WILD WEST LIFE WAS ENOUGH FOR THEM.

Three Plainfield Boys Start Out to Gather Scalps—One Night in a Box-Car Satisfied Their Romantic Desires—Home Again.

Three small lads ranging from twelve to fourteen years of age tramped down from Plainfield to Dunellen Saturday evening about nine o'clock, each with a bundle of clothing fastened to a stick and slung over the shoulder. The three boys cautiously mounted a coal train at Dunellen and rode up the line as far as the train went that night. They slept in the cold and woke up Sunday morning chilled and hungry, but with nothing to eat. The gilded visions of the west, that had tempted them to desert their comfortable Plainfield homes, did not look as pleasing as before the start, and the boys began to realize that the life of a tramp is not an ideal one. One day of cold and hunger was enough, and last evening three tired, hungry and footsore lads arrived in Plainfield and went home to their families where they were gladly welcomed back.

One of the boys was the son of Mrs. Stewart W. Milligan, of West Fourth street, the second was the son of Carpenter Charles M. Wilson, of West Fourth street, and the third was a lad named Devine from over in the borough. When the boys disappeared their parents became very anxious about them and notified the police. The boys returned, however, before any active search could be instituted.

ALMOST BROKE HIS NECK.

A. P. Simmonds Dived Into a Plunge Bath and Struck His Head.

To those that knew Albert P. Simmonds several years ago when he resided at the home of his father, Herman Simmonds, of Watchung avenue, would hardly recognize him now, so greatly has he changed. He is now at Baton Rouge, where he is training the football team of the Louisiana State College.

Just at present Mr. Simmonds is suffering from an injury which might have resulted fatally. He plunged into the bath in the gymnasium and struck his head against the bottom of the tank, cutting it in several places. The only wonder is that he did not break his neck. He is doing all right, however, and is able to look after the team as usual.

WINTER CIRCUS QUARTERS.

The Forker Farm Sold to a Famous Hippodrome Rider.

The Forker farm, adjoining the Sebring farm at Sebring's Mills was sold a few days ago to Prof. Lowanda the hippodrome rider, late of the Barnum & Baileys' and who recently has had a show of his own at Atlantic City and Coney Island. It is Prof. Lowanda's intention to erect winter quarters on this place and to have all his parapharnalia and horses wintered there. He will commence the erection of the necessary buildings at once. This place is in North Plainfield township and it will be made the headquarters of equestrains of world-wide reputation.

The Season Closed.

The Scotch Plains baseball team closed the season on Saturday with a one-sided contest with the Harlem Y. M. C. A., of New York. Johnston occupied the box for the home team, and the visitors were unable to find the ball. Only seven innings were played, owing to darkness. The score then stood fifteen to three in favor of the home team. The Scotch Plains ball club has put up a very good article of ball this season, considering that it was late when the team was put in the field. Twelve games were played, nine of which were victories. Two of the defeats were administered by the Plainfield Y. M. C. A's.

A Wedding Reception.

A wedding reception was given by Mr. and Mrs. John Carl at their home on Manson place yesterday afternoon, at which time a large number of friends were present. The afternoon was spent in a social way to the enjoyment of all. Mr. and Mrs. Carl received many handsome presents.

Irving W. Larimore, physical director of Y. M. C. A., Des Moines, Iowa, says he can conscientiously recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm to athletes, gymnasts, bicyclists, football players and the profession in general for bruises, sprains and dislocations; also for soreness and stiffness of the muscles. When applied before the parts become swollen it will effect a cure in one half the time usually required. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

THE NO-HUMP MAN WINS.

THE STRAIGHT-UP RIDER SCORES A VICTORY AT SATURDAY'S RACES.

R. G. Betts, Editor of The Wheel, Decrys the Bicycle Hump and Rides Perpendicular With Success—Results of the Events.

No records were broken and no fast time was made, but those who attended the club races of the Manhattan Bicycle Club Saturday afternoon at the Crescent Oval saw several very close races and lots of fun. The New York riders came out to have a good time, and judging from appearances, they had it, besides furnishing a pleasant afternoon for about two hundred and fifty Plainfielders. Most of the crowd, however, was made up of little boys, some clean, others dirty and ragged, but they all, both colored and white, took advantage of the free races and turned out in full force.

The races, themselves, were quite exciting, especially the finishes, which gave evidence of the efficiency of the handicapping. The one-mile handicap, which came first, was a pretty race, and resulted in a pretty finish between Oatman and Stanback, the former winning by a wheel. R. G. Betts, the editor of The Wheel, started from the 120 yard mark and followed out his doctrine of not humping, but sitting upright while riding. He finished fourth, coming in ahead of some of his less perpendicular club mates.

The most exciting race of the day was the half-mile scratch, Oatman crossing the tape a lenghth ahead while Stanbach secured second by less than a foot after a bitter fight on the home stretch.

In the two-mile handicap the scratch men rode together and divided the places between themselves, Oatman winning his third race by a wheel, while Stanback smiled himself into second place.

The last race was the five-mile handicap and was supposed to be the event of the day. The limit men got over a lap's start on the scratch men and tried to hold it. Betts soon went to the front, however, and rode on with McFarland, the two alternately pacing for each other, but the plucky newspaper man could ride and won a victory for himself and the doctrine of no hump. The scratch men rode like fiends to catch the limit men and were not far between in the last lap, when Dimick ran into Wheeler's rear wheel, throwing Wheeler and Dimick together. Stanback was directly behind the two, but he met the situation like a man and rode over the fallen wheels then into the field beside the track and finally back onto the track again and finished third.

The officials who served during the afternoon were:

Referee, Clarence E. Teel; Judges, W. T. Stewart, J. T. Dougherty, W. F. Kerr; Timers, C. M. Cohen and George Taggart; Starter and Clerk of the Course, J. Oatman.

The summary of the races is as follows:

One mile handicap. Won by A. Oatman, scratch; C. P. Staubach, scratch, second; C. J. Dimick, 25 yards, third. Time, 2:29 4-5. The other starters were G. C. Wheeler, R. H. Bartsch, H. G. R. Ausbutell, J. W. Foster, Jr., J. Meyer, R. L. McFarland, R. G. Betts.

One mile novice handicap. Won by J. W. Foster, Jr., scratch; M. A. King, 50 yards, second; F. H. Campbell, 100 yards, third. Time, 2:43 2-5. The other starter was Mr. Cohen.

One-half mile scratch. Won by A. Oatman; C. P. Staubach, second; R. H. Baatsch, third. Time, 1:14. The other starters were C. J. Dimick, G. C. Wheeler, J. Meyer.

Two mile handicap. Won by A. Oatman, scratch; C. P. Staubach, scratch, second; R. H. Bartsch, scratch, third. Time, 5:23. The other starters were G. C. Wheeler, C. J. Dimick, J. W. Foster, Jr., R. G. Betts.

Five mile handicap. Won by R. G. Betts, 1 minute, 20 seconds; R. L. McFarland, 1 minute, 45 seconds, second; C. P. Staubach, scratch, third. Time, 15:52 2-5. The other starters were M. A. King, J. W. Foster, Jr., C. J. Dimick, G. C. Wheeler, R. H. Bartsch and A. Oatman.

While in Chicago, Mr. Charles L Kahler, a prominent shoe merchant of Des Moines, Iowa, had quite a serious time of it. He took such a severe cold that he could hardly talk or navigate, but the prompt use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cured him of his cold so quickly that others at the hotel who had bad colds followed his example and half a dozen persons ordered it from the nearest drug store. They were profuse in their thanks to Mr. Kahler for telling them how to cure a bad cold so quickly. For sale at Reynolds's pharmrcy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

PLAYED ALONE.

South Orange Tennis Players Fail to Appear at the Hillside Grounds.

Two tennis cracks from the South Orange Field Club were to come to play Plainfield's best at the Hillside Tennis Club courts on Saturday afternoon, but they did not. The Plainfield boys were there all right, but no one appeared against them, and so a little match was arranged between the players for the benefit of those who came to see the Orange cracks play. Four teams for doubles were secured, Dr. W. Richards and George Ryder, R. A. Beebe and Sherwood West, Howard W. Beebe and Fred W. Walz, and Carl F. Walz and J. H. P. Wharton, and each team was pitted against each of the others. Some very pretty tennis resulted and those present saw some exciting contests. H. W. Beebe and F. W. Walz won the match by scoring three victories and no defeats. C. F. Walz and J. H. P. Wharton were next with two victories and a single defeat. Dr. Richards and George Ryder lost to both of the preceding teams, but won from R. A. Beebe and S. West, thus taking third place in the list.

The scores of the different matches were as follows:

C. Walz and Wharton defeated R. Beebe and West, 6-2, 6-4. C. Walz and Wharton defeated Richards and Ryder, 6 4, 6-4. H. Beebe and F. Walz defeated Richards and Ryder, 8-6, 6 4. H. Beebe and F. Walz defeated C. Walz and Wharton, 6-2, 4 6, 6-3. H. Beebe and F. Walz, defeated R. Beebe and West, 6-4, 6-3. Richards and Ryder defeated R. Beebe and West, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

A GREAT GAME.

Y. M. C. A. Baseball Fiends Have Lots of Fun.

The sport-loving faction of the Y. M. C. A. met at the end of the Somerset street trolley line Saturday and participated in a game of baseball, the record of which will go down into history as one of the fiercest battles ever fought on the diamond. There was a determined effort on the part of both sides to capture the game. When years have brought gray hairs to those who played in this game, there will still be great pleasure in reciting the exciting events of the notable game played on Saturday afternoon.

The grounds were very rough, and brilliant plays were frequently made. Among the features of the game was the playing of S. W. Clark. This being his first attempt at baseball, his efforts were noteworthy. He persisted, after hitting the ball, in running to the pitcher's box, and of course was put out. Probably the star play of the game was the catch of a fly by George Beebe. The ball fell right into his hands, and he was so much surprised that he almost dropped it. The activity of George Corwell was marked and he ran bases like a deer.

C. M. Evans was the heavy hitting player, making three home runs, as did also John Whiting. It is understood that President Freedman, of the Newark Club, is after the latter. At the end of three innings, which consumed two hours and a half, the score stood 24 to 24, and on account of darkness the game was called. Below will be found the names and number of runs made by each:

Their Eighth Annual Ball.

Probably one of the most popular and well-conducted events among the young people of Plainfield is the annual ball of the Twilight Social Club, who already have a committee hard at work perfecting arrangements for their eighth annual. The dance will be held in the Crescent Bicycle Academy, on Watchung avenue, on Thanksgiving Eve, Wednesday, November 27th. The music for dancing will be furnished by Prof. Nickols, of Newark, and the committee will spare no time or labor in looking to the comfort and pleasure of all who favor them with their presence. The officers of the club are: President, F. S. Moore; Corresponding Secretary, E. C. Searing; Financial Secretary, L. Feiring; Treasurer, J. W. Loughlin.

Married Last Night.

Katy Proudhon and Frederick Meyers, both of Washington Valley, were married at the residence of the bride's parents, Valley road, last evening. A reception will be tendered them tonight at Mr. Proudhon's home.

RALLY OF THE SCHOLARS.

FIRST BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOL HAVE INTERESTING EXERCISES.

Afternoon Sessions of the School Resumed—Remarks Made by Superintendent Case and Prof. D. A. MacPhie.

The Sunday-school scholars of the First Baptist church and their friends celebrated "Rallying Day" yesterday afternoon in a thoroughly pleasing manner to all.

The feature in Plainfield Sunday-school work is a new one, but gives promise of being important as Children's Day.

The platform was prettily trimmed with golden rod and asparagus vine. Superintendent R. K. Case was in charge. After First Assistant Superintendent G. H. Batchelor read the eighty-fifth Psalm, prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes, pastor of the church.

The primary department, in charge of their superintendent, Mrs. Powlison, then sang "A Little Talk with Jesus Makes it Right." A beautiful soprano solo "I Lay My Sins on Jesus" was rendered by Miss Bessie Blair, accompanied by Howard Case on the piano. Superintendent R. K. Case then made a few remarks relative to the observance of the day. He said it was a pleasure to him to see so many present, for it seemed like a re-uniting. He hoped that its observance would increase from year to year and be productive of much good.

After a delightful vocal solo "The New Jerusalem" by L. H. Bigelow, Jr., and a recitation "The Fall of the Year" by Hazel Grant, Mr. Case introduced D. A. MacPhie, of the Y. M. C. A., who made an excellent address. He said there were three essential elements in Sunday-school work, namely, Endeavor, Endurance and Enthusiasm. Endeavor had of late years become a great word, especially in the Christian Endeavor society, where young women and men were educated in the Master's work, but the greatest society was the Sunday-school. It is the duty, continued Mr. MacPhie, of every boy and girl to tell the whole world of Christ's death. A little girl was once asked if her papa was a Christian, and she replied she thought he was, but he hadn't been working at it lately.

The church wants consecrated hearts and lives, not big heads. Secondly, we want more endurance. Our young people need it as well as the older ones. Don't think that when you are converted you will get enough religion to last you all your life. You will need staying power that you can get from day to day. Thirdly, we want enthusiasm. The superintendent, teachers, and scholars need it. A woman once said she didn't enjoy a funeral because there was no enthusiam there. Our Sunday-schools want to be thoroughly awake and alive with enthusiasm. General Grant once said, the only way to be successful was to push things, and that's what we want to do, also to agitate matters pertaining to our schools. Give them prominence and may God help you to do a grand work for him and his church. Mr. Case thanked Mr. MacPhie for his timely words as though he must have known just exactly what the First Baptist Sunday-school needed. After Mr. Bigelow had given notice of the meeting this evening to organize a boys' brigade, Miss Addie Parker Jackson gave a recitation. For those who heard this talented young woman, words would fail to express the pleasure enjoyed yesterday. Her work was superb and perfect. Those present were given a rare treat. Another pleasing vocal solo by Miss Bessie Blair closed the programme, and after the school sang a hymn the benedie- was pronounced by Dr. Yerkes.

Mission at St. Joseph's.

At St. Joseph's R. C. church yesterday morning the missions were opened by Revs. Father Snyder and Daley of the Church of St. Alphonsus, New York. In the evening there was a very large attendance. Father Daley gave an interesting talk on the Rosary and Father Snyder presented the subject of Soul Saving. Both talks were very interesting and instructive. The mission will continue this week. The hours of service will be 5 and 8:30 a. m. and 8 p. m. Next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock the mission will close.

A. M. Bailey, a well-known citizen of Eugene, Oregon, says his wife has for years been troubled with chronic diarrhoea and used many remedies with little relief until she tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and diarrhoea Remedy, which has cured her sound and well. Give it a trial and you will be surprised at the prompt relief it affords. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, corner Park and North avenues, T. S. Armstrong, Manager

GOSSIP FROM BERLIN

Matters of General Interest at the German Capital.

The Russian Finance Minister's Mysterious Visit—Kiel Canal Tolls. A Glimpse of Royalty at Home. The Kaiserin Not in Favor of "Emancipated Woman."

Berlin, Sept. 30.—The prolonged stay in Berlin of M. de Witte, the Russian minister of finance, simultaneously with the visit to the German capital of an agent of the Bank of St. Petersburg has given the appearance of truth to reports that Russia is endeavoring to induce Germany to participate in her politico-financial projects in China. M. de Witte, however, has positively denied that his visit has anything to do with finance, but there are many who still believe that this asservation is merely a diplomatic figure of speech.

Belgian's King's Projected Visit.

The projected visit to Berlin of the king of the Belgians, which it was surmised had relation to affairs in the Congo state, has been either indefinitely delayed or finally abandoned, no one seems to know which. It is understood from current gossip, however, that the emperor had a strong dislike to personal negotiations on the subject and caused King Leopold to be informed that the negotiations must be conducted through diplomatic channels.

Kiel Canal Tolls.

Despite the complaints made by the chambers of commerce at Kiel and Stettin, as well as by others, the government has declined to reduce the tolls of the Baltic-North sea canal. The protest formulated by the Stettin chamber of sommerce calls attention to the fact that during the month of August only 718 vessels passed through the canal, and this at the old rates. To-morrow the new rate, which increases the tolls by 25 per cent. will go into effect. As the system of lighting of the banks of the canal by electricity is very defective, vessels venturing through the canal are likely to be stopped during many of the long winter nights, and it is certain that this prospect will still further, and to a great extent, lessen the traffic.

Domestic Life of the Empress.

A lady connected with the entourage of the empress has given some very interesting details of the daily life and opinions of the kaiserin. The imperial lady, it seems, is by no means an admirer of the "emancipated woman," and holds that matrimony is woman's natural destiny. Nevertheless in several cases her majesty has advised ladies under exceptional circumstances to adopt a profession instead of contracting matrimonial ties, and has lent her personal assistance to carry out her advice. The empress gives strict personal attention to the regulations of her household and often pays visits of inspection to the kitchen, which is as simple in its appointments as that of the household of a well-to-do burgher.

In Jail as a Dummy.

Joseph Dierl, alias Roland, formerly a blacksmith and later an actor, who has recently been signing articles in the capacity of editor of the socialist organ, the Vorwaerts, has been arrested on the charge of lese majeste, his offense having consisted in the publication of the comments of the Vorwaerts upon the speech delivered by the emperor to the guards upon the occasion of the Sedan fetes. It is altogether probable that Dierl never wrote a line that appeared in the Vorwaerts, and is in jail merely as a dummy for the real writer of the objectionable articles.

Measures of Reprisal Threatened.

The Kreuz Zeitung, commenting upon the reported movement originated by Washington politicians for the payment of export premiums says: "If such premiums should be voted in any form the act will force the adoption of measures reprisal in Germany and other European states." The Freisinnige Zeitung expresses the opinion that the proposals for export premiums are a natural pendant to the present agrarian agitation in Germany.

IS THE BIG FIGHT OFF?

Efforts Now To Have Fitzsimmons and Corbett Meet at Dallas.

Austin, Tex., Sept. 30.—A sensational rumor direct from sporting circles is current here. Corbett and Fitzsimmons have been wired that the fight is off and purse pulled down by the Florida Athletic club. The fighters have been asked if they would enter the ring at Dallas on Oct. 7 or 10. A big circus is en route to Texas, and they have been asked to cancel previous dates and be in Dallas on one of the above dates. The tent will accomodate 40,000 persons, who will pay big money to witness the exhibition, and the athletic club will make money on the fight.

SCHOONER JOSIE F. A WRECK.

Run on the Rocks at Napatree Point—Crew Rescued.

New London, Conn., Sept. 30.—The British schoone Josie F., from St. Johnsr for Stonington, loaded with lath and lumber, went ashore at Napatree point at 3 o'clock yesterday morning and is a total wreck now. The captain mistook the buoys and the vessels went on among the rocks. Her crew was taken off by the life-savers.

Dangerous Blaze at Westchester.

Westchester, Pa., Sept. 30.—S. C. Black's planing mill was burned yesterday, causing a loss of $8,000. A dozen houses caught fire from the intense heat, but none was entirely destroyed. Dwellings a square or more away caught fire from the sparks.

For Maintaining a Trust.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 30.—The Kentucky and Tennessee board of underwriters has been indicted for maintaining a trust. The warrants are now being drawn and in a few days all the members will be arrested and bound over to court for trial.

Sheriff To Sell a Railroad.

Altoona, Pa., Sept. 30.—The sheriff of Centre county will sell the Altoona & Philipsburg connecting railroad on Wednesday. This road is now in operation between Philipsburg, Centre county, and Ramey, Clearfield county.

STORM ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

The Worst Gale in Years Now Raging—Much Damage Caused.

St. Joseph, Mich., Sept. 30.—The storm which has raged here since last Saturday morning has as yet abated but little. No steamers have left here since Friday night and much fruit is now laying on the docks awaiting transportation. The steamer Puritan, probably to make a record, left Chicago yesterday morning in the face of the gale, arriving three miles off this port at 11 o'clock. She was rolling and pounding very badly and could only be seen a portion of the time. The waves were rolling over the piers and she could not enter and started off on the Milwaukee route. Two schooners are reported ashore between here and South Haven. The wind has whipped the remaining fruit off the trees, blown several small houses down and torn shade trees up by the roots, besides damaging telegrphic cummunication. Reports from Muskegon says that one of the worst lake gales has been raging there for thirty-six hours and waves have rolled higher than for many years, submerging wharves and doing considerable damage. The steamers of the Goodrich line did not leave port last night owing to the roughness of the lake.

NEW YORK'S EXCISE WAR.

More Business Done by Saloons Yesterday Than on the Previous Sunday.

New York, Sept. 30.—Although the police were energetic in their efforts to thoroughly enfore the excise law yesterday, it was not quite so strictly observed as on the previous Sunday. The saloons that carried on a quite trade for the benefit of their friends and best costomers, had acquired a degree of caution from former experience. They were careful not only to keep out all who might be possible police spies, but also those who were only occasional patrons. Where a saloon keeper was doing business the doors and windows were carefully screened, so that the police could not get evidence of excise violations from the sidewalk. Members of the Liquor Dealers Central association were said by the police to have adhered to their promise some time ago not to keep open on Sunday. It is said that taose who violated the law were outside of the association. No attempt was made by the police to interfere with the big clubs or with cafes and restaurants.

MISSING MAUD STEIDEL.

An Anonymous Letter Gives the Police a Slight Clue.

Chicago, Sept. 30.—A special from St. Joseph, Mo., says: An anonymous letter received by the mother of Maud Steidel, the girl who dissappeared from her home Sunday night a week ago, has given the police the only clue to her whereabouts. It is claimed by them that the girl will be found in a few days. The letter threatens the mother with severe punishment for the trouble she has caused to Father Wagner, and says if she had not made the accusations the girl would have been at her home before this time. The police claim to have found the writer of the letter. The theory that the girl has been sent to Chicago is strengthened by the statement that Father Wagner has friends there. Father Wagner has become almost crazed by the strain on him. Nothing further has been heard from Dora Kennedy, who disappeared shortly after Maud Steidel was missed under similar circumstances, and mystery surrounding her disappearance is as deep as ever.

CUT HIS THROAT.

The Son of a Retired Rubber Manufacturer Commits Suicide.

Trenton, Sept. 30.—Charles Leroy Welling, son of Lewis S. Welling, a retired rubber manufacturer committed suicide yesterday by cutting his throat with a razor. He was prominent in club life and well educated. At twenty he was admitted to the bar, later had a connection with the law firm of Gilchrist, McGill & Gilmour of Jersey City, of which firm Chancellor McGill was a member. Welling, however, gave up the practice of law and for several years past was a traveling salesman for Whitehead Bros., rubber manufacturers of this city.

WRECKED A PRINTING OFFICE.

A Guayaquil Mob Revenges an Attack on Gen. Alfaro.

New York, Sept. 30.—A special cable message from Guayaquil, Ecuador, says: A conservative journal of Quito having made a furious attack on General Alfaro and the army of patriots for la honra nacional a mob destroyed the journal's office yesterday. The police had to protect the editor and proprietor, Victor Vivar and P. Dorja, from lynchers, who imagined that the journal's offense was instigation to the murder of Alfaro.

Tobacco Culture in Kansas.

Wichita, Kas., Sept. 30.—A syndicate of wealthy Kentucky farmers are negotiating for the purchase of a large body of land in Anderson county upon which they propose to establish an immense tobacco plantation. They claim to have demonstrated that the tobacco plant reaches perfect maturity here much earlier than in the central and eastern states and with less cultivation.

Mine Cave-in.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 30.—An extensive cave-in occurred at No. 4 mine in Plymouth late Saturday night. It extends 150 feet in length, the surface having settled twelve feet. Many of the chambers in the mine have been closed by the falling debris. The squeeze continued last night, though no further damage is apprehended.

In Memory of Mazzini.

Rome, Sept. 30.—Six hundred delegates from various republican societies, with flags and bands of music, marched to the capitol last evening to do honor to the memory of the Italian patriot, Guiseppe Mazzini. Signor Taroni, the radical member of the chamber of deputies, delivered an oration.

GEN. MILES IS THE MAN

To Take Charge of Uncle Sam's Army.

Says He Has Been Informed That He Has Been Selected To Succeed Gen. Schofield—The Latter Going Abroad and Will Later Settle Down in Washington.

New York, Sept. 30.—Maj.-Gen. Nelson A. Miles, at present commanding the department of the Atlantic at Governor's island, stated officially last night that he will go to Washington as successor to Lieut.-Gen. Schofield. The title of lieutenant-general died a natural death yesterday, and Gen. Miles will be still a major-general, though he will command the army of the United States. "It is true," he said, "that I am to succeed Gen. Schofield at Washington. Secretary Lamont sent for me last Thursday, and on Friday I met him by appointment at the Metropolitan club. We had a long talk, the substance of which I cannot give you. But it dealt with the future policy of the department. I was informed that I had been named to take charge of the army. I was also told that Gen. Ruger, now at Washington revising the tactics, has been named as my successor here. He will probably receive his formal orders when I receive mine—in a day or two." Gen. Miles would not speak of his future policy.

GEN. SCHOFIELD'S RETIREMENT

After a Year in Egypt He Will Settle Down in Washington.

Washington, Sept. 30.—President Cleveland's order retiring Gen. Schofield from active service will be made public to-day. No intimation has been given here of the president's intention with regard to the appointment of the general's successor as commanding officer. General and Mrs. Schofield will spend a year or two in travel before settling down to private life in Washington. Mrs. Schofield desires to spend the winter in Egypt. Secretary Lamont has nothing to say regarding the case of Major Armes. Gen. Schofield said that notwitstanding the action of Judge Brandly in releasing Major Armes that that officer was still under arrest by the military autharities to answer charges that might be brought against him. It is probable that nothing will be done by the secretary of war until the habeas corpus case is settled in court.

BLOODSHED FEARED.

Catholics and A. P. A. of Pana, Ill., at War Over a Corpse.

Pana, Ill., Sept. 30.—Walter Lyford, aged 19 years, was caught ander a cable car in the Springside Coal company's mine yesterday morning and internally injured. He died yesterday afternoon. Before he died Rev. Father Wiegand called at the house and was admitted. Passing his hands over the body of young Lyford he said a prayer. E. S. Lyford, father of the boy, objected to the proceedings and ordered Father Wiegand out of the house. Father Wiegand left and informed Catholics of the action of Lyford. Some of the Catholics were greatly excited over the treatment given to their priest and say as the dead boy is a member of the Catholic faith, they will take his body and see that he is decently buried in accordance with the rules of the faith. Lyford's father, who is a member of the A. P. A., called on that order for assistance and twenty-five members responded. The A. P. A.s have charge of the body and declare that they will stand their ground and if any attempt is made to take it bloodshed will follow.

VIOLATED REVENUE LAWS.

Chong Eyou Arrested for Having an Illicit Whiskey Still.

New York, Sept. 30.—Chong Eyou, an intelligent looking Chinaman, 40 years old, who was arrested Saturday evening charged with violating the internal revenue laws, was arraigned before Magistrate Simms in the Morrisania police court yesterday. The complaint alleges that Chong Eyou violated the laws relating to the United States revenue by having an illicit still in Westchester for the purpose of making whiskey. When arraigned Chong denied making whiskey, claiming that his concoction was medicine. He was remanded pending the action of the United States marshal. Chong exclaimed as he left the court: "Melican man not likee Chinaman, but he likee my medice."

TOO MUCH RISK.

Efforts To Enlist Men in North Carolina To Go to Cuba Fail.

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 30.—An agent of the Cuban revolutionists is in Catawba county attempting to enlist men to go to Cuba. He has offered a commission as a lieutenant and makes other liberal propositions. No one seems willing to undertake the risk. Efforts made at other points in North Carolina to secure recruits have likewise failed, though there is general sympathy for the Cubans.

Monument to Carnot.

Paris, Sept. 30.—The monument to the late President Carnot at Fontainobleau was inaugurated yesterday. President Faure attended the ceremony. Afterwards M. Carnot's three sons and his son-in-law lunched with the president. The widow of M. Carnot was not present.

WILL BE A TOTAL LOSS

No Hope of Saving the Steamship Mariposa.

Twenty Feet of Water in Her Engine Room—Crew Still Quartered in a Tent on Shore—Cattle and Sheep Landed—Another Steamer Goes Ashore and Is Lost.

St. Johns, N. F., Sept. 30.—The British warship Buzzard arrived here yesterday from Forteau, Labrador coast, where the Dominion line steamer Mariposa, which sailed from Montreal September 20 for Liverpool, in command of Captain Cabe, is ashore, and reports that it will be impossible to float her. The whole forepart of the Mariposa's bottom is torn out and the ship is full of water, there being twenty feet of water in the engine room. The officers of the Buzzard fear that the Mariposa suffered considerable during the southwest gale which raged last Thursday night, as she was in a very exposed position. The Buzzard came here to summon assistance in saving the cargo of the stranded steamer, and it is believed that much of it can be taken out if the weather continues favorable. The steamer Nimrod, which was fishing near the scene of the disaster will probably take off the full cargo. All the cattle and sheep on the Mariposa had been landed, the salvors getting half their value. The captain and officers of the Mariposa remain by the ship, living in a tent on the shore near the wreck.

HUMBOLDT ON THE ROCKS.

The Pacific Steamship Fast Breaking Up—Passengers Saved.

Eureka, Cal., Sept. 30.—The steamer Humboldt is on the rocks off Point Gorda and is a total wreck. A. H. Buhne and Purser Laird, who got ashore in a small boat, have reached this city. The passengers were all taken safely to shore in lifeboats before the first boat containing the purser and his men landed. The mail was not taken off, but in all probability the life-saving crew will do so when a tug arrives on the scene. The Humboldt is lying about 1,000 yards from land with her stern pointing shoreward and is breaking up fast.

ST. PAUL'S TRIAL TRIP.

International Navigation Company Think She Is a Record Breaker.

On Board steamship St. Paul, Delaware Breakwater, Sept. 30.—The International Navigation company's new steamship St. Paul left Cramp's shipyard, Philadelphia, yesterday morning for her trial trip and made the run of forty miles to Reedy island in four hours. When the vessel arrived off here anchor was dropped to await the high tide. Although it was Sunday and Philadelphia's water front was practically deserted, the St. Paul was saluted by every steam craft she passed, and her whistle was almost constantly replying to salutes until she had passed the city. The anchor was weighed at 6 o'clock last evening, and the course shaped for Delaware breakwater. The run to the breakwater—sixty-five miles—was made in four and one-half hours. The ship anchored at The Brown, a few miles above the breakwater.

Trial Trip To Be Held Off Gloucester.

This morning compasses were adjusted and officers of the International Navigation company and some few invited guests were taken on board from Lewes, Del., where they came by special train from Philadelphia. Then she stood out to sea, the course being shaped for Gloucester, Mass. It is expected that the vessel will arrive off Gloucester some time to-morrow afternoon. She will not enter Boston harbor, but, weather permitting, will come to anchor off Gloucester. The naval officers constituting the government trial board will come aboard at Gloucester, and on Wednesday the trial run will be made. After the trial the ship will proceed to New York, arriving there Thursday.

Expected To Beat St. Louis' Time.

In her recent four hours' trial in the English channel the St. Louis, a sister ship, averaged 22:03 knots an hour, which was the fastest time ever made in a trial of that length of time by a passenger steamship. Some changes, principally in lengthening and increasing the diameter of the two smokestacks, have been made in the St. Paul since she and the St. Louis were designed, and her builders expect her to exceed her sister ship's time on trial. They will not commit themselves, however, beyond saying that she will make 22 knots, but it is safe to say they will be disappointed if she does not average 22:25 or even 22:50 knots an hour on Wednesday.

LENZ'S MURDER.

The Kurds Thought His Bicycle Was Made of Silver.

Pittsburg, Sept. 30.—A sworn affidavit made by Enozer Semsinan has been received here by the executor of Frank Lenz, who was murdered in Tchelkain in May, 1894. The affidavit was taken at Erzeroum by the British consul. Semsinan started to search for Lenz, and located part of his bicycle near Tchelkain. He also learned that a body was found in a stream near that place, which was undoubtly that of the unfortunate rider. Lenz stopped in the village one night and was never again seen alive. The natives thought his wheel was of silver and murdered him, broke up his bicycle and divided the different parts. Sachtleben, who is searching for Lenz, has probably by this time reached the spot where Lenz lost his life.

Funeral of Ephraim W. Bull.

Concord, Mass., Sept. 30.—The funeral of Ephraim W. Bull, the originator of the Concord grape, was held here yesterday afternoon in the Unitarian church. At the grave in Sleepy Hollow cemetery the Masonic burial service was used.

Cool Weather at Gray Gables.

Buzzards Bay, Mass., Sept. 30.—The weather is very cool to-day and open fires are not at all uncomfortable at Gray Gables. Editor Gilder was the president's guest yesterday.

Marlborough in New York.

New York, Sept. 30.—Duke of Marlborough arrived here from Boston this morning.

BASEBALL SEASON CLOSED.

To-day's Games End the National Contests for 1895.

New York, Sept. 30.—Only three games are to be played to-day, Baltimore at New York, Brooklyn at Philadelphia, and Boston at Washington, and the National league baseball season is at an end. There is little satisfaction to be gleaned by metropolitan enthusiasts as a result of the work of the Giants during the year. The team representing this city has been a woeful failure. Instead of standing up among the leaders, as a team representing the best ball city in the country should, it occupies eighth place. All credit is due the Baltimores for their glorious victory. In no previous year were so many teams so evenly matched. This makes their success more worthy. It has been a battle from flagfall to finish, and the "Orioles" went under the wire by a head in the lead. Nothing can show better the superb management of Mr. Hanlon. His team "fell down" at times, but they had no lasting setback. They might play a poor game one day, but this would only serve to nerve them up to renewed efforts the following day. They are in a class all by themselves, and if they do not get double honors in the Temple Cup series it will be a great surprise. Their pitching strength may not be as strong as the Cleveland, but in all other respects they excel them. The Temple Cup series should be exciting. The clubs on the closing day stood in the following order: Baltimore, 667; Cleveland, 651; Philadelphia, 592; Chicago, 554; Brooklyn, 546; Boston, 543; Pittsburg, 538; New York, 508; Cincinnati, 508; Washington, 433; St. Louis, 298; Louisville, 267.

CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

Ninth Annual Convention To Convene at New Haven Nov. 7.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 30.—The ninth annual convention of Christian Workers in the United States and Canada will be held in this city for eight days beginning Thursday, Nov. 7. The general plan of the convention is consideration of Christian work among classes not reached by the ordinary ministrations of the church. The work does not consist of a general survey of the field with statistics or general statements of progress of work in general or special fields. It consists of brief reports of methods in various fields, each worker telling something which he or she has been used to accomplish, thus giving both instruction and encouragement to others who may be led to do likewise, adapting suggestions and information received to their own circumstances and fields of effort. Philanthropic, reformatory, or phases of work not directly spiritual are considered only when auxiliary to or directly connected with spiritual effort.

KIRKLAND'S REPRIMAND.

Secretary Herbert's Action Approved by the President.

Washington, Sept. 30.—Secretary Herbert's reprimand of Admiral Kirkland, commanding the European squadron, it is understood, has been approved by President Cleveland, and the incident is thereby probably closed. Admiral Kirkland is an old personal friend of the chief executive of France, and when M. Faure was elected to the presidency of that republic the former wrote him a congratulatory letter, signed in his official capacity. When knowledge of this fact transpired exception was taken to it by the navy department, and Secretary Herbert called for an explanation. Admiral Kirkland made no effort to conceal the authorship of the letter, and the reprimand was administered by the secretary. From this the officer appealed to the president.

SHOT HIS FATHER DEAD.

Sad Accident the Outcome of a Fox Hunt.

Richland Falls, N. Y., Sept. 30.—Nathaniel Doyle and his son James of Queensboro, six miles south of here, went fox hunting yesterday. After a time they lost sight of each other and James shot at what he supposed to be a fox in the bushes. It proved to be his father whom he had shot and mortally wounded. He was a well to do farmer and highly respected in the community.

CONSPIRACY DISCOVERED.

No Actual Attempt Made on the Life of Premier Ito.

Yokohama, Sept. 30.—It is learned that no actual attempt was made upon the life of Premier Ito, but a conspiracy has been discovered, the participants in which intended to kill him. Wednesday night documents which implicated the man who has been arrested were found.

Additions to Washington's Zoo.

Washington, Sept. 30.—Within the past week there have been an unusual number of natural additions to the animals at the National Zoological park. A lioness gave birth to four whelps; a kangaroo brought forth a baby jumper and a nest of young rattlesnakes attract much attention. The latter is said to be the first case of the kind known to have occured in captivity.

Church Dedicated.

Pocantico Hills, N. Y., Sept. 30.—The pretty little Church of the Magdalene, situated in this village, was dedicated yesterday by Archbishop Corrigan. The celebrant of the mass was the venerable Father Evereth, the oldest priest in New York and the first pastor of the present parish of Pocantico Hills.

Prominent Physician Stricken.

PASTEUR'S LAST HOURS

The Great Scientist Suffered Intense Pain.

Passed Away in a Chamber in a Ramshackle Building Above Stables Where Horses Are Kept—His Wife Closed His Eyes After Death. France Anxious To Bury Him.

Paris, Sept. 30.—The following information concerning the closing hours of Prof. Pasteur's life has been obtained by the correspondent of the United Press, who has just returned from Villeneuve: Prof. Pasteur's condition became seriously worse on Friday evening last. Albuminuria was observed, the heart action became very weak and painful, and violent spasms became frequent. About 9 o'clock Saturday morning Prof. Pasteur's wife asked him if he suffered much pain. The dying man faintly whispered "Yes." This was the last word that he uttered. Afterward he was most of the time unconscious. When it was seen that the end was near Prof. Pasteur's son, who was staying at San Sebastian, was summoned, but he did not arrive in time to see his father alive. Mme. Pasteur, a few near relatives, Dr. Roux and others engaged in the Pasteur institute were present at the death bed. After death Mme. Pasteur closed her husband's eyes and placed a crucifix in his hands.

Very Modest Death Chamber.

At L'Etang park in a room on the first floor of a ram-shackle building, above stables where a hundred horses are kept for use in connection with the preparation of diphtheria scrum, lie the remains of the great chemist. The chamber has a low ceiling and the walls are covered with cheap green paper. A small carpet is spread on the deal floor. There are two wicker-seated chairs and an arm-chair. The body lies on a simple, curtainless wooden bedstead. On a plain table stands a branched candlestick in which are lighted candles. Close by, in a cupboard placed between two widows are the books that M. Pasteur used to take to Villeneuve from Paris whenever he paid a visit there. The unpretentious character of the surroundings seems to throw into relief the reposeful features and strong, benevolent face of the dead man. The hands are clasped on the crucifix which Mdme. Pasteur placed in them when her husband died. On the white coverlet are arrayed many of the orders and other decorations which were conferred upon M. Pasteur during his lifetime. The members of the family watch mourning by the bedside.

The Body To Lie in State.

While the United Press correspondent was in the death chamber M. Poincaire, French minister of public instructions, arrived. His mission was to request the family to allow the government to give the dead scientist national obsequies and to inter the body in the pantheon. M. Valery, the husband of M. Pasteur's daughter, on behalf of the family deferred an acceptance of these offers until M. Octave Gerard, M. Pasteur's executor and colleague in the academy, reads the will of the dead man to the assembled family. Nevertheless it was settled last night that the body will be exposed in the library of the Pasteur institute.

Many Messages of Condolence.

A stream of visitors yesterday signed the register at Villenuve. Among them were many eminent men of science, academicians and societaires. The little telegraph office at Garshes, which is close to Villenuve, is kept busy receiving telegrams of condolence that are sent to Mme. Pasteur. President Faure, M. Hortaux, French minister of foreign affairs; the king of Belgians, who is visiting Paris, M. Saussier, military governor of Paris; Dr. Lepine and the Paris Students' association were among the first to send messages to the widow.

Burial Place Selected.

A dispatch to a Paris news agency says that it has been decided to inter the body of M. Pasteur in the garden of the Pasteur institute in Paris, in accordance with the wishes of his family. After a service in Nortredam cathedral the body will be placed temporarily in a vault at Mont Martre.

Dr. Pasteur's Discoveries.

New York, Sept. 30.—Dr. Gibier, senior doctor at the Pasteur institute, said last night that the discovery of the hydrophobia treatment was not by far the greatest of M. Pasteur's works. Years before he had discovered and put into practice what is called the antiseptic surgery. Before this discovery deaths from gangrene in wounds were frequent. The greatest surgeons, he said, have laughed at Pasteur, not knowing that his early discoveries gave them their success.

So great have been the manifestations of interest and sympathy that the committee has rented Association hall, as well as Central Music hall, and two meetings will be held.

Washington, Sept. 30.—Col. James Dugan, of Bristol, Pa., was found dead at the Forester house yesterday. He had been in the city several days, awaiting the coming of his wife, and had been slightly ill for a day or two. Saturday, however, he seemed to be better, but yesterday he failed to appear for breakfast. Death resulted from heart disease. The deceased was 73 years old.

Plainfield may close the saloons, shut up barber shops, stop the work of bootblacks, etc., etc., on Sunday, but it will always be inconsistent as long as the cider joints are allowed to run full blast on Sunday. It is a parody on the excise laws to allow the sale of hard cider in the manner it is sold in this city on the day when intoxicating drinks are a supposedly impossible thing to procure.

The Board of Police of Boston notified all the storekeepers of the Hebrew colony in the north end of that city that they must hereafter close their places of business on Sunday. A test case will probably be made. A case as to the rights of the Hebrews, under the Constitution of the United States, to do business on Sunday, when they observe the preceding day as the Sabbath, has been pending in the courts of Massachusetts for more than seven years without a final decision.

The editor of The News has an utter disregard for truth when he takes up his pen to write anything concerning The Daily Press. Last Friday he stated that the business man who advertised exclusively in The News and was compelled to close his store on account of his inability to establish a trade, was once an advertiser in The Daily Press, but ordered his advertisement out because he could get no results from it. This statement of The News editor is a lie pure and simple. The man never advertised in The Press.

Several Buffalo men have formed a company which has for its corporate object the identification of travelers who are killed among strangers, and the notification of their friends of the sad event. Each client of this extraordinary company is to be provided with a badge whereby it will be known that particulars concerning the deceased may be obtained by applying to the Buffalo company. Something of this sort would be a good thing for gentlemen who are in the habit of going home from their clubs in a state of bibulous doubt as to their own identity.—Rochester Union.

From constable to mayor is the official promotion that a Perth Amboy man is looking for. Edward Crudden was an independent candidate for mayor against E.W. Barnes, the present chief executive of Perth Amboy. Failing to defeat his opponent, Mr. Crudden took the next best thing that came along and last spring was elected to the constabulary force of the old Dutch town. But his aspirations are high and he is after the mayoralty on rather novel grounds. Mayor Barnes is a New York business man and resides at Flemington, where he owns a farm and summer home. Constable Crudden takes the stand that Perth Amboy ought not to be ruled by carpet baggers, and he therefore calls upon the Board of Aldermen to remove the present mayor and install him into the executive chair, on the ground that Mayor Barnes "has no more right according to the statute to hold the office of Mayor," and that having been an independent candidate at the time of election he polled the necessary number of votes to qualify him for the office, and he therefore demands his rights. To paraphrase, the result of the Constable's demand "willbe awaited with interest."

Mr. Leal's School.

Young men and boys over sixteen years of age, who cannot attend school during the entire session, and who wish to take such studies as will speedily prepare them for business, are informed that they may enter classes already formed in book-keeping, penmanship, English, rhetoric composition and commercial arithmetic. Should there be a sufficient number of applicants for instruction in shorthand, an expert stenographer will direct the class. Instruction in all these branches is given by teachers whose ability is unquestioned. This work will occupy about two and a half hours per day, and the rates of tuition will be made known on application.

A Sewer Cavein.

Another cavein on the trunk sewer ditch at Westfield imperilled the life of an Italian on Friday. The man was working at the bottom of the sixteen-foot trench, when the bank gave way and buried him completely. The other Italian workmen were so frightened that they would not return to the ditch to assist their companion, and the foreman managed to rescue him alone. The man was unconscious when brought to the surface.

Telegraph Operator McLoughlin Ill at Muhlenberg Hospital.

Well known in every newspaper office in the United States as one of the most rapid press telegraph operators in the country, J. H. McLoughlin now lies very ill, in fact almost dying, with typhoid fever at Muhlenberg Hospital. He came here about a week ago to visit his old friend, W. E. Martin, manager of the Postal Telegraph Company in this city. He was taken ill and Mr. Martin had him taken to the hospital so that he might have the best of care. He then telegraphed for the father and mother of the sick man who arrived Saturday, and were able to look after their boy.

Mr. McLoughlin has worked from one end of the country to the other, and is at the top of his profession. The incessant work, which enabled to rise, has broken down his constitution, and should he recover it is feared that he will be unable to continue in his duties as operator.

The matter of increasing the pay of the Elizabeth police, which was defeated recently, may come up again at the City Council meeting Tuesday night. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer one hundred dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THEATRICAL.

During the action of "A Happy Little Home" which is the new comedy satire Geo. W. Monroe is going to present here, that popular comedian will be seen in three separate and distinct characters, first as a lawyer, then as a female fortune teller, and later as a detective. The moral taught by this new comedy is that any house into which enters the fortune teller, the lawyer and the detecive that domicile is likely to become a decidedly unhappy one. Mr. Monroe is credited with having made as great a success in this new play as that which was accorded him during the long run of that furiously funny fantastical farce "My Aunt Bridget." Music Hall, Thursday, October 3d.

"The Mountebank" which Frederick Warde and his company will present at Music Hall next Saturday evening is not a tragedy but a romatic drama in which comedy as well as pathos abounds. It has proved one of the most attractive plays produced by this eminent actor and in the title role he finds one of his greatest characterizations. During the summer superb scenery has been painted for each of the four acts, costumes have been made in exact reproduction of the fashion of the times at which the action of the play took place, and accessories in keeping with the requirements have been manufactured, so that the representation will, as a production, outrival even those which have heretofore been so superbly staged by Mr. Warde.

Prompt Payment.

Treasurer D. W. Littell and Secretary H. A. Thorne, of the Royal Arcanum on Saturday evening presented to the widow of the late Rowland M. Stover the check for the sum of $3,000 which was due her as insurance on the life of Mr. Stover. The promptness with which this claim has been paid by the Arcanum gives ample evidence of the substantiability of the order. Nine days after the proof of the death of Mr. Stover was mailed from this city by Mr. Littell the check was received by him to cancel the obligation, which is remarkably fast time when it is considered that it has to travel several hundred miles to receive the signatures of the proper officials.

Public Opening.

The Plainfield Business College has a public opening this evening at eight o'clock, in its beautiful rooms, 415 to 417 Babcock building. Everybody is invited to see the rooms, hear the speeches, and learn about this new enterprise. The school begins its regular work on Tuesday morning. Prof. E. E. Ferris and Prof. R. M. Wade, the new teachers, are on hand. The prospect is bright for a good and successful school.

Jersey Central's Oilhouse Burned.

The oilhouse of the Central New Jersey Railroad at Elizabethport was discovered to be on fire Saturday morning at 2 o'clock, and was completely gutted, all its contents being totally destroyed. These included besides oil, waste and other supplies for locomotives. This is the third time the place has been burned out. The fire is supposed to have been caused by spontaneous combustion. The loss is $1,500.

Praise of Mr. Dunham.

Engineer Dunham is to be praised and thanked for his determined attitude toward the latteral sewer contractors in that he demanded an increased force of workmen in order that the sewer may be laid within the time limit; and he properly enough urges the Town Committee to employ extra men to do the work if the contractors fail to hurry up.—Westfield Standard.

Funeral of Miss Hasbrouck.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck yesterday afternoon officiated at the funeral services of one of Westfield's respected citizens, Miss Mary C. Hasbrouck, who died on Friday last after a long and painful illness. She was a member of Trinity Reformed church, of this city, and a devout Christian woman, beloved by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, who will greatly miss her.

A Boys Brigade.

A boys brigade will be formed and organized in the First Baptist church this evening by L. H. Bigelow, Jr. Every boy in the city who is interested is earnestly invited to be present. The F. L. C. Martin Cycle Company received last Saturday evening a brand-new Cleveland tandem which they will add to their rental department. It weighs about forty pounds and is geared to eighty. It is made as a combination tandem, but by simply attaching a bar a rigid diamond frame tandem is formed.

Robert Wyckoff left the employ of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Co., Saturday after several years of faithful service. He started yesterday on his wheel for a cycling trip into New York State from which he will return in about a week. On October 10th, he will enter upon his duties with the Crescent Cycling Academy which opens about that time.

Mrs. G. Runyon and daughter, Mrs. Smalley, who have been visiting Mrs. J. B. Conover, of Front street, has returned home.

Miss Mary Nelson and Miss May Riley, of Finderne, were in town Saturday on their wheels, and returned home Sunday morning.

While Willard Apgar was busy turning out some work in the sash and blind factory Friday morning the wheel was going so fast as to slip off and strike him in the face, cutting him severely and bruising his hands. Dr. Brakeley was called and dressed the wounds.

'ONLY SKIN DEEP", yet freckles, sunburn and tan don't add to one's beauty! What then, aside from the dangerous and poisonous "skin cures" so freely advertised, can we use to clear and bleach a bad complexion? Well, why not try your grandmother's cure—lemon juice? It will surely do all that can be safely done to clear the skin. And try it in the pleasant form of REYNOLD'S LEMON JUICE AND GLYCERINE. The results will please you. ONE PUDDING 204 FEET LONG.

Baked In a Trench, It Was a Feast For Many Villages.

I had been ten years on Savage island and meant to come to England on a visit, but before leaving went to each village to say goodby to the people. We had been three weeks from home when we got to a little village called Liku.

The evening after our arrival there was a terrible commotion. Men, women and children were running about, some carrying sticks, some logs of wood and some big stones.

The men began digging a long shallow trench with their sharp pointed sticks. The boys brought big stones and firewood. These were piled up all along one side of the trench. The wood was then set fire to and was soon blazing, while the stones on the top were getting hot.

While the fire was burning one side little bundles of something white and soft were being undone from the clean leaves that contained them. This was the paste out of which the pudding was to be made.

There was no flour, suet, eggs, milk, plums or currants in it. It was the paste of a native vegetable called taro and old cocoanut, both grated very fine and mixed together. A long pudding cloth was laid along the side of the trench, and in it the pudding was carefully wrapped. It was not calico or linen, but nice clean banana leaves. Over this long cocoanut leaves were plaited.

When the stones were hot enough, some were quickly laid along the bottom of the trench; then the long pudding was laid on the top of them and then some more stones at the sides and on the top.

Some girls had brought heaps of leaves to lay over the top to keep the heat and steam in, and the earth which had been dug out of the trench was thrown over the top.

The cooks and pudding makers all went to sleep and left the stars to watch their cookery. Next morning at 8 the whole village was astir, men, women and children all in holiday attire.

It was soon uncovered and was found to be well done. Long poles were brought and laid the whole length. These were fastened to the pudding by small vines, canes, etc. It was then rolled out of the trench on one side, short sticks were made fast crosswise to the poles, and all was ready for taking up.

About 100 men and boys then raised it on their shoulders, and with one tremendous shout started toward my house, accompanied by the whole village.

I measured it before carving and found it was 204 feet long—two feet longer than the monument of London is high. It measured 13 inches in circumference. It was soon carved into pieces four yards long, and these were distributed all over the land, men carrying as much pudding as their strength would allow to distant villages.—English Exchange.

A Joke on the Proprietor.

A young newspaper man working his way east from Denver tells of some amusing incidents of his experience in a city which is one of Denver's rivals. The newspaper on which he worked was owned by an old fellow who had worked his way from poverty to proprietorship and whose proprietorship of a newspaper was acquired under a mortgage foreclosure.

As soon as the old man got hold of the property he began to look around to find out where he could save a few dollars in the running expenses. Several weeks passed before he ventured a suggestion. Said he: "Do you know that fellow in the little room up stairs—the fellow who works with a pair of shears and a paste pot?"

"Why, yes; that is Tompkins, the exchange editor," said the manager.

"Tompkins? Yes, that's his name. Well, you want to keep your eye on him. In fact, if you take my advice you'll give him the grand bounce next pay day."

"Why? He is one of the best men on the force."

"Don't you believe it. I have been watchin him unbeknownst for days, and I give you my word 'n honor he don't do a thing from sun to sun except sit there with his feet cocked up and read newspapers. Fire him! He is soldiering, an you can bet on it."

With great difficulty the manager made the irate proprietor understand that it was the business of the exchange editor to read newspapers and that the more he read the better his work was likely to be.—Chicago Times-Herald.

How One Should Shake Hands.

Few of those who shake the hands of public men on occasions of receptions held in their honor realize the effect of this process if long continued upon the person who submits to it. Inquiry of them would often elicit the fact that there were swollen hands or strained muscles and badly afflicted nerves as its result. President Polk had an experience of this kind which led him to study into the art of shaking hands for his own protection, and this is his conclusion with regard to it, set down in his private diary:

"If a man surrendered his hand to be shaken by one horizontally, by another perpendicularly and by another with a strong grip, he could not fail to suffer severely from it, but if he would shake and not be shaken, grip and not be gripped, taking care always to squeeze the hand of his adversary as hard as the adversary squeezes him, he would suffer no inconvenience from it. I can generally anticipate a strong grip from a stronger man, and I then take advantage of him by being quicker than he and seizing him by the tip of his fingers."

This has the obvious advantage of demonstrating cordiality on the part of those who thus heartily grasp hands held out to them.—Boston Herald.

The Good Deacon.

"I once ran for highway commissioner," observed Deacon Ironside, "and the other man and I got exactly the same vote."

"How did you settle it?" asked Elder Kreepalong.

"He offered to decide the matter by tossing up a copper cent, but I said that was gambling, and I wouldn't gamble if I never got an office in the world. So we pulled straws for it, and I got the right one. There's a little trick at pulling straws," added the good deacon with a twinkle in his eye, "that everybody doesn't know. I'm generally pretty lucky at pull'n straws."—Chicago Tribune.

The earliest known attempt at an explanation of the rainbow was made by Aristotle. It was along the line of modern scientific investigation.

There is nothing more truly insinuating and deferential than the waggle of a little dog's tail in the presence of a big dog with a bone.

THEIR OWN EXECUTIONERS.

Horrible Device of the Hudson Bay Indians For Capturing Wolves.

The northern Indians, particularly in the Hudson bay region, and the Eskimos possess a fiendish ingenuity in their method of capturing game, and their way of applying it for killing wolves is horrible.

They take a flat piece of flint a foot or so long and chipped to extreme sharpness at the edge. This they fasten to a wooden stake, which they drive into the ground firmly, so as to leave the blade of flint projecting above the surface. Then they cover the blade all over with a good sized piece of fat from seal or other such animal, which freezes. Now the wolf catching apparatus is complete, so that the person who sets the trap has only to come back in a day or two and gather his prey without trouble.

The wolf has an insatiable appetite for blood, and it is of this weakness that the hunter takes advantage. A little while after the trap described is set along comes the wolf. He is hungry and licks the piece of fat, and as it is thawed by the warmth of his tongue it tastes better and better. Presently his tongue comes into contact with the sharp edge of the flint and is cut.

He tastes the blood, not knowing that it is his own, and the flavor drives him wild. Eagerly he licks and licks it, lacerating his mouth and becoming more frenzied in his desire for his own life fluid. Meanwhile other wolves have come up and have begun to lick at the fat, cutting their own tongues and becoming in their turn wild at the taste. So presently the bait is surrounded by a pack of ravenous and crazy creatures, which soon turn upon one another and fall to devouring each other until the merciless flint is the center of a struggling mass of ferocious combatants fighting for very life.

It is like the struggle that followed the planting of the dragon's teeth of old, only that none of those who participate lives long after the fight is over, the last survivor bleeding to death. At his leisure the hunter appears on the scene and skins the dead beasts for market. The skins cost him nothing save the trouble of removing them and the value of the hunk of fat. The stake with the flint blade is ready to be set again for other victims.—Indianapolis Journal.

AN IRREVERENT FARMER.

He Wanted an Agricultural Report Regardless of Date or Subject.

The official in charge of the correspondence of the agricultural department in Washington a few years ago was a gentleman of education and polish. But, above all, he was a conscientious and consummate letter writer. All the courteous expressions of governmental epistles were at his fingers' ends, and it was a pleasure to him to impart to them a gracefulness that governmental letters sometimes lack.

He received a scrawly letter one day. It was from Hosea Jones of Goose Run, Wis. It was addressed to the "Agrycultural deptment, Wash'ntn, D. C.," and it said, "Sir, I want a agreecultral repo't, an being in the farmin bisness I orter git it."

Now, there are many agricultural reports, of many dates and on many topics, and a request for one or more of these valuable and absorbing volumes should of necessity be more specific than Mr. Jones' request was. The official, having plenty of time and seeing a chance for harmless pleasantry, indited an elaborate letter to the farmer, informing him of the eagerness with which the government desired to give the husbandmen of the nation all the information it had obtained as the result of scientific and practical research. This and more he wrote of the agricultural department's solicitude for the farmer, and then indicating the desirability of a specific statement as to the date or the subject of the report desired he closed with the assurance of the secretary's esteem.

Mr. Jones responded promptly and somewhat laconically. "I don't give a d—n," he wrote, "what the book is about or when it was rote. I want it fur a skrapbook."—New York World.

Did the Dog Reason?

"I am sure," says a correspondent, "you will enjoy this story of a dog's intelligence, which has the merit of being absolutely true. Schneider was a large, full blooded, handsome setter. He was very fond of being with the boys, and one day they took him when they were going bathing. They bathed in a pond which was crossed by a railroad bridge carrying one track. While the boys bathed Schneider sat on the track and watched them. Suddenly, to the horror of the boys, a train appeared. There was no time for the dog to get off the bridge and it was too high for him to jump. The boys turned away to avoid the sight of the dog's death, and after the train had passed looked about with a shudder at what they expected to behold. To their amazement, the dog trotted off the bridge entirely unhurt. The engineer of the train explained afterward how the dog had escaped. As the train approached Schneider evidently saw that his situation was desperate and quickly thought out his only way of safety. He stepped over the rail to the projecting ends of the sleepers, laid himself down as flat as he possibly could and let the train pass over him. The engineer saw it all, and as the train passed he looked back and saw that the lowest step just grazed the dog's back. Could a human being have reasoned more correctly and acted more quickly than the dog?"—Boston Transcript.

Mr. Manners.

"In a restaurant of the 'lower middle class,'" said an epicure, "I saw a fellow eating with his knife. A few years ago any man might have eaten with his knife and no one would have cared. But manners are better than they used to be, and this man's proceedings attracted attention all over the room. He was an elderly man and evidently had learned his manners in the old days.

"By the way, are children still taught to leave the last piece of bread or cake for 'manners?' In Charles Leland's child's book, 'Johnnykin and the Goblins,' Mr. Manners appears—a thin, cadaverous gentleman in evening clothes, who is supported by what the children leave for him in the dish.

"Do you still cut off the tip of the boiled tongue before you begin to serve the tongue? I don't know why that used to be done. Perhaps as a sacrifice to the gods. I think that most of the tongues nowadays come in cans, so that perhaps the tips cannot be cut off as of old."—New York Sun.

FEL. CARESSING HER DEAD BABIES.

Pathetic Incident of a Polar Bear Hunt In the Arctic Regions.

"I never look at a polar bear," said an officer from Fort Sheridan who was showing a party of friends through the zoo at Lincoln park the other day, "but I think of a pathetic story related to me by a friend in the navy, Lieutenant Bevier. He was a member of an exploring expedition which went into the arctic regions several years ago. Members of the party who were more sportive than scientific in their inclinations spent a good deal of time hunting polar bears. Lieutenant Bevier used to go out with them occasionally, but an experience he had one day took away all desire for that kind of sport, and he never went with them again.

"The hunters came upon a bear lying on the ice with two cubs beside her. She was a magnificent specimen, nearly as large, I should judge from his description, as this one in the pit. The cubs were handsome little fellows, and the men were very anxious to capture them. The sailors had a quantity of seahorse flesh in the boat with them, a thing the bears esteem highly. When they had rowed close enough to be able to do so, they flung a big piece of this meat to the cake of ice on which the bears were lying. The old bear looked up as if rather surprised at this unusual generosity and then tore the flesh into three pieces. The two larger ones she gave to her cubs, just as any human mother would do, keeping only a small piece for herself. The sailors took deliberate aim at her and fired. The idea was to kill her and then carry away the cubs. Owing to the fact that they were bad marksmen, however, or because the boat was unsteady their volley killed the cubs, but only wounded the bear.

"Apparently forgetting her own wounds, she began licking those of her babies. Then she tore off more meat from one of the larger pieces and laid it before them, but when they failed to respond she tried to move them with her paws and raise them up by putting her nose under them. At last she seemed to realize that something terrible had happened to them, for she raised her head in the direction of the boat and uttered a loud growl, at the same time making toward it as if she intended to take revenge for the murder of her young. At that instant two of the men fired again, and she fell, but she did not die immediately, and in her last moments licked the body of one of the poor little cubs. Even the sailors were touched by this exhibition of affection, and the lieutenant said he felt as if he had been a party to a crime."—Chicago Tribune.

An Unsuspected Cause of Suffering.

A scientist gives an account of a man who was admitted to a hospital with a severe and obstinate case of inflammation of the eyes, face and hands. Ordinary applications gave no relief, and a thorough microscopic examination of the affected parts was resorted to. This proved the existence of thousands of tiny hairs, not unlike in appearance those from the caterpillar. They had entered the skin and produced this violent irritation. The plants which the man had been working with were examined, and it was found that a variety of the primrose was the offender. The downy looking hairs on the leaves were sufficiently rigid to prick through the skin, and each one was charged with a poison after the fashion of the fangs of a snake. The doctor extracted this poison, which he used as a subcutaneous injection in the cases of several patients. He claims excellent results from this method of treating various obstinate skin diseases.

In the same connection it may be stated that experiments in the treatment of cancer have been tried with satisfactory results. An animal was inoculated with cancerous material, then after a suitable period the serum of the blood was collected and two cancer patients were inoculated with it. In both cases there was an almost immediate and positive improvement. Sufficient time has not elapsed fully to test this discovery, but it certainly has great possibilities, as even though patients are only temporarily benefited there is encouragement enough to persevere until the longed for ultimatum is reached.—New York Ledger.

A Queer Medal of Napoleon III.

Napoleon the Great was a sedulous coiner of medals of victory, as all numismatic collectors are aware. His nephew imitated him in this practice, although his opportunities for this kind of self glorification were of course not so numerous as those of his uncle. A collector of Rappoltsweiler informs The Tageblatt that he is the possessor of a very rare medal for which Napoleon III ordered a die to be made and of which the specimens would now be extremely plentiful but for the battle of Sedan. On one side of the medal is the profile of Louis Napoleon, whose head is crowned with the laurel of victory and the inscription, "Napoleon III, Imperator." On the other stand the sanguine words, "Finis Germaniæ, 1870." The medal is of some white metal, possibly silver, and is somewhat larger than an English half crown. The Tageblatt doubts whether the despondent Napoleon himself gave the order for such a medal to be coined and is rather inclined to think that it is only the speculation of a certain business firm which reckoned confidently upon French conquest of Germany and resolved to get an early profit out of it.—Westminster Gazette.

Is It a Necessity?

With each year the practical necessity of a college education for women becomes more apparent, especially for the woman schoolteacher. She who was a graduate always commanded a higher salary than the teacher who had not had such advantages, but now many educational institutions refuse to accept nongraduates as teachers at all. This advance in the educational standard has but one drawback. Like everything else, a good education costs more than a poor one. Hundreds of eager girls obliged to earn their own livelihood are therefore handicapped in so doing by lack of means to obtain a college education. It is for such as these that the need of free scholarships and any other means that will help them to help themselves is so strongly felt. With the advance in educational standards there should also be an advance in the means by which those standards may be reached.—New York Sun.

Second Place as Good as First.

"It's one of the tricks of the races not to win now and then," remarked a sage of the cycle to a group of admirers at a wheel instruction school. "The fellow who knows a thing or two prefers to come in second and even third, where he is sharp enough to see that the prizes are worth more to him than is the first. At country fairs this is especially the case, for there the second prize is often cash, fully equal in real value to the first prize, sometimes claimed to be worth three times as much as the second."—Philadelphia Call.

VIOLINS OF CREMONA.

HISTORY AND PRESENT OWNERSHIP OF RARE OLD INSTRUMENTS.

The Jupiter Owned by Mr. Barnes—The Story of the Famous Betts—How the Messiah Got Its Name—False Impression Regarding Stradivarius.

One of the most valuable violins in New York is the Jupiter, a Stradivarius owned by Thurlow Weed Barnes. He paid something like $10,000 for it. Mr. Barnes is enthusiastic on the subject of violins and violin playing and is an expert amateur performer. He has been fond of violins for many years and was long on the watch for an exceptionally fine instrument. It was not until about four years ago that he was so fortunate as to become the possessor of the Stradivarius of 1722, known all over Europe as the Jupiter.

This violin came into Mr. Barnes' hands by accident. It was bought by him directly from the Duchess de Camposelice, who lives in the Rue Kleber, Paris. The Duke de Camposelice was well known as an admirer of stringed instruments and had been in the habit of playing once or twice a week in a string quartet in which every instrument was a Stradivarius. His music room, built especially for the purpose, with high, vaulted ceiling, contained cabinets which held his most valuable violins, violas and 'cellos. One cabinet held under secure fastening the famous violins known as the Betts and the Jupiter, the former bearing date 1699, the latter 1722. The other instruments in this cabinet were his favorite viola, probably the finest in the world, and a magnificent violoncello. These were the treasures of the collection through a long series of years.

Mr. Barnes became acquainted with the duchess through common friends in Paris, who had intimated that in their opinion the duchess, who for some little time had been a widow, might be willing to sell part of her late husband's collection, in which, besides the works of Stradivarius, were instruments made by Joseph Guarneri, Amati, Gagliano Puggeri and by German, Flemish, Spanish, Dutch and French masters.

Special attention was given to the fiddle known as the Betts, whose history lends to the instrument peculiar notoriety and attractiveness. As every expert in Europe and America knows, this is one of the finest creations that left the shops of the master of the art of violin manufacture. The story of the Betts is as follows:

One day in London an unkempt stranger dashed into the shop of a second class violin dealer named Betts, whose shop did not attract any remarkable patronage. Rushing up to Betts, the stranger, who carried a violin under his arm, exclaimed:

"Here is a fiddle which I want to sell. Look at it quickly and make me an offer."

As soon as he glanced at the instrument Betts saw that it was the most valuable violin he had ever seen.

"What price do you expect to get for this instrument?" he asked.

"Oh, give me a pound," the stranger said, "and you can have the violin; only be quick about it, as I must be off in a hurry."

Betts mechanically produced a sovereign and threw it down on the counter. The stranger took it and departed in haste.

The Duke of Camposelice paid about 50,000 francs for this fiddle.

The violin known as the Jupiter was always played in the Camposelice quartet. In appearance it differs notably from the Betts, being a little larger and a little darker. There are peculiar distinguishing marks about the Jupiter fiddle. On the back the grains of the wood, matching each other at equal distances from the center, run nearly the entire length of the instrument. The tone of the Jupiter is what gives it its name. It has a distinctively commanding quality, characteristic not only of Stradivarius, but also of this particular instrument. The tone, while soft and delicate, is penetrating, and its volume is all that a virtuoso could ask even in the largest concert hall.

The date of the Jupiter also is important, for before 1690 Stradivarius made few good violins, while those made by him later than 1725 show traces of lessening genius.

With the Jupiter, the Betts and the Elijah, which is owned by Mr. Nowell of Boston, must be ranked the Stradivarius known as the Messiah. Its name has a curious history. It belonged once to M. Allard, the former teacher and luthier in Paris. For many years whenever any of the great French, Spanish or Hungarian players went into Allard's shop to show him their instruments they would ask:

"Well, M. Allard, what have you to say to my violin?"

And Allard would reply invariably, "It is very fine, but I have to confess to you, as a matter of truth, although I regret for your sake to say so, that I have seen a finer one."

When pressed for further information, Allard would never give particulars. The instrument to which he referred belonged to an old Italian in Genoa, and Allard was waiting for his death to buy it. He did not wish to have all the violinists of Europe as competitors. As Allard long failed to produce the famous violin it came to be known in jest as the Messiah, because it did not come. Finally Allard secured it. He put it in a glass case and would not allow it to be touched except by a favored visitor. After his death the Messiah was sold for more than 60,000 francs to Mr. Laurie, a rich amateur violinist in Edinburgh, who still has it.

As years pass the violins of Stradivarius increase in value. The same is true also of good specimens from the hands of other old Cremona makers. A false impression is common regarding the original prices of the Stradivarius instruments. They were not sold for what now would be thought the cheapest nominal figures. The papers and correspondence of Stradivarius, many of them now in the hands of Hill of New Bond street, London, who is writing a life of the great master, show that Antonius Stradivarius usually made violins only on special orders from the nobility of Europe; that he often worked from three to five years in perfecting a solo instrument and that he received large prices, never turning out any but first class specimens.—New York Sun.

The Russian Secret Service.

The agents of the Russian secret service are numerous above all conception, and are found in all stations in life. Nobody in Russia can tell whether a member of his own family, of his own servants, or one of his friends is not an agent of the secret service. This fact brings us back to the special significance of the situation—the Russian secret police system destroys in Russia to a certain degree the confidence of family life, the good fellowship of friendship, and has been fatal to many innocent and peaceful citizens, as in Russia a denunciation is sufficient to ruin an honest person's life.—New York Press.

THE DOLLAR MARK.

Its Peculiarity In Being Written Before Instead of After Figures.

Did it ever strike you as being at all peculiar that we should use the dollar mark ($) before instead of after the figures in expressing the sum of 5, 10, 20 or any other number of dollars? We may say "25 dollars" plain enough for any one to understand, but as soon as we put the expression into figures and characters it is "dollars 25" ($25), instead of 25$, as it should be. Nor is this all that is peculiar in this connection.

In every country which has a written language and a system of coinage the abbreviation for the unit of value precedes the figures. In England the pound mark (£) is used in the same manner that the dollar mark is used in this country, while the same peculiarity is noticeable in Germany, where the abbreviation m. (for mark) appears preceding the number, just as the French abbreviation fr. (for franc) is used in France.

If abbreviations are not used, the legend is more apt to be correct. We find that in Mexico they have a "2½ pesos" instead of "p. 2½," as one might expect, and in Newfoundland they have a plain 2 dollar piece. So, too, in France, where the abbreviation is not used we find such pieces as "10 francs," "20 francs" and "40 francs." In Germany they have a piece marked "X thaler," which is all very plain, but the moment a clerk, bookkeeper or other person makes an entry or puts down a memorandum he tells you that it is a "th. X."

The English pound sign, which is believed to be the oldest monetary abbreviation now in use, is the old initial letter by which the Romans expressed "pounds," just as we use the "lbs." It has been suggested that we use our money abbreviation backward because the Romans in expressing "pounds" always said "libra decem" instead of "decem libra," the first being "pounds ten" and the latter "ten pounds." When their initial letter or character was used, it always preceded the figures, thus "£10," instead of the reverse. Thus the whole world has gotten in the habit of doing these things backward.—St. Louis Republic.

CHARACTER IN FEET.

It Can Be Accurately Read Every Time, According to a Chiropodist.

Nobody thinks of Trilby without thinking of Trilby's foot. After having been sighed for centuries, it was left for the genius of Du Maurier to draw attention to this much abused member of the human body. Why hadn't somebody thought of it before?

"Why, do you know," said a gentleman who is looked up to as one of the leading intellectual lights, "I have a friend who is a chiropodist in the metropolis, a gentleman of unquestioned learning and veracity, who has made a study of the matter for years, and he tells me that the human foot is one of the surest indexes to character that has ever been discovered. 'People say they can detect character in the countenance, but let me examine a man's foot and I will tell you what manner of a man he is,' says my friend. In every instance where I have taken the trouble to follow out his instructions I have found them to be absolutely accurate.

"You can tell a fiery tempered man by the shape of his foot as easy as you can tell a rhinoceros by his hide. As there are all sorts of temperaments, so there are all varieties of feet. Each temperament leaves its foot mark, and if the scientists would spend their time in investigating this matter instead of weighing the planets we should have some practical data from which we could determine in a few moments whether a man could be intrusted to handle large sums of money and thus do away entirely with the necessity of giving bonds. If a merchant wanted a salesman, he would not need to ask for recommendations; he would merely request to see the applicant's foot, when he would know instantly whether or not he was the man he wanted. I tell you, now that Du Maurier has popularized feet so that scientists will not consider the matter too humble a one upon which to expend their energies, you may expect some wonderful discoveries to result from the study in a few years."—Rochester Herald.

A Dog Mimic.

Rev. Frank M. Downing of Moore county, Tenn., is the owner of a most remarkable dog called Bench. In appearance the animal is not prepossessing, his color being a dirty yellow, his hair coarse and wiry, his legs short and his body rather unwieldy. In his eyes, however, there gleams an intelligence almost human. At the word of command Bench will crow like a Shanghai rooster, neigh like a horse, low like a cow, grunt and squeal in imitation of pigs, mew like a cat and repeat the various voices incident to farm life. He could give all the yelps of a pack of hounds in pursuit of a fox and in so realistic a manner that you could scarcely help believing that a hunt was in progress.

This dog was never trained to do this, but as a puppy picked up the cries of the farmyard and has added to them the creaking of wagons and the whirring of machinery as made by a thrasher. Mr. Downing has been offered fabulous sums for the wonderful dog, but refuses to part with him. Trained animal keepers who have examined Bench and become familiar with his powers of mimicry say that it would be an easy matter to teach the dog to articulate words, perhaps even to talk connectedly.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Modest Chicago.

Here is a modest allusion to Chicago in the News of that city: "She has been burned out of existence in a day and fattened on the ashes. She has builded a dreamland for the world to play in and thought little of the achievement. She has essayed a drainage canal, and before the people barely know of it the bulk of the gigantic enterprise is completed and the glorification exercises are over. This is not boasting; it is a modest recording of a glittering, sparkling, radiating fact. It is a measly testimonial of the grand, whooperup, ripsnorting vastness of the greatest aggregation of human souls ever brought together under one municipal canvas."

Politeness.

Don't pass a woman at close quarters, on the stairs of a hotel, with a cigar in your mouth or a hat on your head. A cultivated Frenchman or German would not do such a thing. The woman may be the veriest stranger, but he lifts his hat and takes his cigar out of his mouth as he goes by, respectfully looking straight ahead.—New York Telegram.

The First Lecture.

Tomorrow afternoon will be heard the first lecture in the course which the Union County Equal Suffrage Association has arranged for the month of October to be held in the Y.M.C.A. assembly hall. Mrs. Hudders, who speaks tomorrow afternoon, is a very talented woman who has the reputation of speaking of things of a practical value to know and of telling them in such a way as to be very interesting to her hearers.

At the Lyceum.

The coming week will be the fifth of "The Prisoner of Zenda," with E. H. Sothern, at the Lyceum Theatre in New York, and the large crowds show no abatement in the great popularity of this plan. It will doubtless run through the whole of Mr. Sothern's engagement, and could run longer. A number of Plainfielders are arranging theatre parties for this attraction.

ANNOUNCING LEE'S SURRENDER.

The Booming of Cannon at Daylight Gave the News to Washington.

But greater things were yet to come. Most people were sleeping soundly in their beds when, at daylight on the rainy morning of April 10, 1865, a great boom startled the misty air of Washington, shaking the very earth and breaking the windows of houses about Lafayette Square, and moving the inhabitants of that aristocratic locality to say once more that they would be glad when Union victories were done with, or should be celebrated elsewhere. Boom! boom! went the guns, until five hundred were fired. A few people got up in the chill twilight of the morning and raced about in the mud to learn what the good news might be, while others formed a procession and resumed their parades—no dampness, no fatigue being sufficient to depress their ardor.

But many placidly lay abed, well knowing that only one military event could cause all this mighty pother in the air of Washington; and if their nap in the gray dawn was disturbed with dreams of guns and of terms of armies surrendered to Grant by Lee, they awoke later to read of these in the daily papers; for this was Secretary Stanton's way of telling the people that the Army of Northern Virginia had at last laid down its arms, and that peace had come again.

But the great news had really reached Washington the night before (Palm Sunday), and a few newspaper men and others of late habits, who were up through the darkness and the dampness of those memorable hours, had sent the glad tidings all over the Union from Maine to California, and had then unbent themselves in a private and exclusive jollification. When the capital was broad awake, and had taken in the full value of the news, the fever heat that had fired the city on the day after the fall of Richmond did not return. Popular feeling had culminated then, and after the great event there was nothing that could surprise us, not even if "Jeff" Davis himself had come to Washington to surrender.

The streets were shockingly muddy, but were all alive with people singing and cheering, carrying flags and saluting everybody, hungering and thirsting for speeches. Gen. Butler was called out, among others, and he made a speech full of surprising liberality and generosity toward the enemy. The departments gave another holiday to their clerks; so did many business firms; and the Treasury employees assembled in the great corridor of their building and sang "Old Hundreth" with thrilling, even tear-compelling effect. Then they marched in a body across the grounds to the White House, where the President was at breakfast, and serenaded him with "The Star Spangled Banner."—Century.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Callouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. NOVEL READING.

One's Time Might Frequently Better be Spent in Sleep.

Novels form the largest part of the book manuscripts received by publishing houses, says the Philadelphia Times. Out of 100 manuscripts received during a recent fortnight by a prominent publishing firm 62 were novels. In another case 51 out of 100 manuscripts submitted during three weeks were novels. Sometimes the percentage of novels will reach as high as 75; and the assortment of volumes is so large that hundreds of them enjoy but a very limited circulation, many a so-called popular writer netting not over $25 or $50 for wear of brain and pen.

It is somewhat singular that in an age when the demand for solid facts and profitable truths is very large there should be such a market for books which are known to be based on the author's imagination; the only feasible explanation of this phenomenon may be found in the statement that the most telling hits are made through the medium of fictitious narrative; a well designed and adroitly planned novel, teeming with sharp points, radiant with advantageous suggestions and rich in nuggets of common sense, is one of the most potent methods of driving truths home into hearts which might otherwise enjoy slight rations of this kind of diet; with some patients mental stimulants must be well sugared to render them palatable.

But a most unhealthy diet is one which is all sweets and no nutriment; and the spending of hours in the reading of novel trash, hurriedly devouring a cheap story for the mere sake of finding "how it comes out," is worse than so many hours of dead sleep; and the recreation has not the slightest excuse unless it be that thereby the reader is kept out of mischief or a still more harmful waste of time.—Clinton Item.

During the war old Rastus was asked by a Federal soldier why he was not out fighting for his rights. After pondering for a moment he replied:

Upon her felicity broke the villian rudely.

At 49c—A beautiful line of Crepon cloth, in brown, green, blue and black, were 65c a yard.
At 75c—An all-wool black serge, 52 in. wide, a genuine beauty; must be seen to be judged rightly; were 92c a yard.
At 45c—An all-wool black serge, 45 in. wide; very reasonable at 55c a yd.
At 39c—All-wool serges in blue and black, the regular 50c quality; further comment unnecessary.
At 50c—A very pretty line of all-wool figured dress goods, with changeable effects; were 59c a yard.
At 15c—38-inch worsted dress goods in all leading shades; can you match this elsewhere?
Talk about silks, why we are right in it, as far as prices and style goes.
At 75c—Fancy plaid silks, suitable for waists or fronts; the very latest combinations; were 90c.
At 39c—An immense line of plain silks an entire new importation; would be considered cheap at 50c a yd.

Millinery Goods.

Our opening in this department has greatly exceeded our fondest hopes. We wish to convey to our patrons in general the assurance that anything needed by them in this line, such as Sailors, Alpines, Tam O'Shanties, Toques, ribbons, and in fact, everything and anything pertaining to this line, will be sold at prices which cannot be approached by any other millinery house in this city.
